INTRODUCTION.

IN 1887-88 I edited for this Society 'The Richt Vay to the Kingdome of Hevin,'—the earliest known prose treatise in the Scottish dialect, setting forth the doctrines of the Reformers,—and in the Introduction, prefixed to it, I gave some account of the author, and of the sources from which his work was derived. It has seemed to me, that it would be a not inappropriate sequel to that work, that I should now edit the earliest known metrical treatise in our native tongue, which formally set forth the faith and teaching of the Reformers, and had a far more powerful influence on the course of events, and which it can now be shown was drawn from sources similar to those from which Gau also drew,—the writings of Luther and his followers—not, however, from their prose, but from their hymnological writings, which had hardly less influence in helping on the movement they had begun.

The new and vigorous spiritual life which had been aroused or quickened in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, through the earnest study of the Word of God in the vernacular, poured itself out in a continuous stream of popular sacred song, which diffused its influence more widely and made it penetrate more deeply. In Bohemia this had been so more or less even from the days of John Hus. Indeed there, as one of the most recent writers on the subject tells us,¹ "the demand for the use of the vernacular in church worship was even more fundamental than the similar desire in Germany, and preceded rather than followed the movement toward reform. Hus was also a prototype of Luther, in that he was virtually the founder of the Bohemian hymnody. He wrote hymns both in Latin and in Czech, and earnestly encouraged the use of vernacular songs by the people, and a number of the finest of these were ultimately translated into German." In Italy, as another has it, "from the Gulf of Genoa to the Adriatic Sea, in the deep valleys, among the purple Apennines, and even in queenly Florence, which a few years later sent the bold friar of San Marco to heaven in a chariot of fire, simple Italian ballads, containing some of the elementary truths of the Gospel, were rapidly winning their way among the common people; and Savonarola was altogether right when he trusted the truths which make wise unto salvation to these airy messengers." It was not the first time that God had chosen "the weak things of the world to confound the mighty." "Thirty years later the German churches were ringing with the hymns of Luther, Eber, Sachs, and Weisse, and the poetry of the Reformation wedded to popular music was treasured in the households" of the faithful from the mountains of Switzerland to the swamps of Holland and the shores of the Baltic, and from the banks of the Rhine to those of the Vistula and the Danube, gaining entrance for the teaching of the Reformers, where neither themselves¹ nor their prose writings were allowed access.² The hymns then composed laid the foundation of one of the largest and noblest treasures of Hymnology which the Christian Church yet possesses, and the worth and influence of which were felt even within the old Church, and still continue to be shown by translations of its finest hymns into our own and other languages. "By the middle of the sixteenth century the reformed Hymnology of Denmark had assumed such a position as to call for a history from the pen of Thomisson." And that of Sweden was not far behind. Marôt's translations of the Psalms and other Scriptural songs into French verse were sung with relish to secular tunes in the dissolute Court of France, and wedded to more worthy music by Calvin and his coadjutors,³ made their way into the Protestant churches of

² "The hymn became, next to the German Bible and the German sermon, the most powerful missionary of the evangelical doctrines of sin and redemption, and accompanied the Reformation in its triumphal march. Printed as tracts, the hymns were scattered far and wide, and sung in the house, the school, the church, and on the street. Many of them survive to this day, and still kindle the flame of devotion."—Schaff's 'German Reformation,' p. 501.

³ "That which struck the French refugees most when they arrived at Geneva

Switzerland and France, and ultimately, for the sake of the tunes, were translated into German by Lobwasser, and became popular in the Reformed churches there.¹

(b) In England.

The only country which may be said to have formed a marked exception to the general rule, and in which consequently the progress of the Reformed faith among the common people was far more slow, was England, in which there was little of note save Sternhold and Hopkins' version of part of the Psalms of David, supplemented by the English exiles at Geneva, and others, and where, though at first enthusiastically received in London² and some of the larger cities, it hardly ever was not the splendour of the lake or the gracious majesty of the monarch of the Alps, nor the physiognomy of the Reformer, nor the austerity of manners, nor the tyranny of the laws. It was the singing of the Psalms which was the great novelty of the epoch. If Beza, as he relates, was deeply impressed by this in 1548, the emotion of Marôt in 1542 must have been more profound still, when his verses sung with deep feeling to grave music by a numerous assembly fell on his ear under the vaulted roof of the church of St Pierre."—Douen's 'Clément Marôt et le Psautier,' i. 394.

¹ There were four or five other adaptations of the French Psalms and melodies in German, but Lobwasser's was by far the most popular, and formed the basis of similar adaptations of these Psalms and their melodies, in Danish, Dutch, Italian, &c. A detailed account will be found in the Bibliography appended to Bovet's 'Histoire de Psautier des Églises Reformées.'

² It was introduced by the exiles, on their return in the beginning of Queen Elizabeth's reign, and by the injunctions which she issued in June 1559 it was provided that "for the comforting of such as delight in music, it may be permitted, that in the beginning or end of Common Prayer, either at morning or evening, there may be sung an hymn, or such like song, to the praise of Almighty God, in the best melody and music that may be devised, having respect that the sentence of the hymn may be understood and perceived." This last direction is perhaps not unfairly interpreted by Cartwright, "understood by those, who because they cannot read cannot sing with the rest." Bishop Jewel, writing in the following year to Peter Martyr, informs him that "the people are everywhere exceedingly inclined to the better part. The practice of joining in church music (ecclesiastica et popularis musica) has very much conduced to this; for as soon as they had once commenced singing in public, in only one little church (St Antholin's) in London, immediately not came to be generally appreciated and adopted outside of Puritan circles. Dr Newman, indeed, used to claim it as a remarkable proof of the caution and wisdom of the English Church that when she found it necessary to abandon the use of the grand old Latin hymns, she did not attempt to substitute others in their stead, but was content to be as one beginning the world again, and "in these respects poor and ill-furnished" like the primitive Church.¹

Scotland in this, as in so many other matters, had more (c) In the Church of the sister kingdom. The influence of sacred song in spreading the new faith and quickening to deeper spiritual life was hardly less conspicuous in our native land than on the Continent. Indeed after the prayerful study of the Scriptures in the vernacular, so earnestly contended for by Alexander Alesius, and conceded at last by the Scottish Parliament in 1543, there was not, during the twenty years of struggle and suffering which preceded the full establishment of the Reformed Church, any instrumentality that contributed so much to keep only the churches in the neighbourhood, but even the towns far distant, began to vie with each other in the same practice. You may now sometimes see at St Paul's Cross, after the sermon, six thousand persons, old and young of both sexes, singing and praising God. This sadly annoys the mass-priests and the devil, for they perceive that by these means the sacred discourses sink more deeply into the minds of men." — Zürich Letters, 1558-1579, p. 71. As he himself found, however, the innovation was not regarded with equal favour by many of the older ecclesiastics, and both he and the other visitors had to enjoin the clergy of Exeter Cathedral not to interfere with the people in singing a Psalm before morning prayer, but to "leave their frowardness," and "aid and assist the people in these their godly doings." Heylin will have it that the practice came in by connivance, not by positive allowance, and was found to interfere with the chanting of the prose canticles.

alive the faith of the sufferers, to spread their doctrines among their countrymen, and to bring their opponents and their teaching into discredit, as the godly and spiritual songs, the tragedies and ballads of those whom God had endowed with the gift of poesy, and whose hearts He had touched with the love of His truth. It is acknowledged by Archibald Hamilton, who at first conformed to but afterwards renounced the Reformed faith, that one of the earliest and most effectual means of promoting it was the circulation of certain books¹ in the vernacular "exposing the vices of the clergy," which were printed in England and surreptitiously introduced into Scotland, and probably committed to memory and propagated orally where printed copies could not be distributed. The metrical address to the friars referred to by Row in his history² may have been one of these. Under the year 1539 Calderwood gives a brief but touching account of "one Kennedy, who had not passed the eighteenth year of his age, a man of good wit and excelling in Scottish poesy," who, under a sentence of the Archbishop of Glasgow, was burned at the stake for his steadfast adherence to the Reformed faith. And after naming various citizens and burgesses who adhered to the Reforming party in these unquiet times, he mentions among the nobility John Stewart, son to the Lord Methven, as "a fervent professour of the truthe," and author of "manie ballats against the corruptions of the time"; also William Hay, Earl of Arroll and Great Constable of Scotland, well versed both in the humanities and in the school of Christ, "for whose testimony he suffered great injury oftentimes, but never retired back therefra." His "letter will and testament" was drawn up in Scottish metre at St Andrews about the same time by Robert Alexander, advocate, and ultimately was published by Bassandine. Then too, as he tells us, the Earl of Glencairn "painted forth the hypocrisy of the friars"¹ in rhyme in an epistle directed from "the holy hermite of Larite"² to his brethren the Greyfriars." "About the same time Frier Killore set forth the history of Christ's passion in form of a comedy, which was acted at Stirling in the king's presence, . . . in which all things were so lively expressed that the very simple people understood and confessed, that as the priests . . . persuaded the people to refuse Christ Jesus and caused Pilate condemn him, so did the bishops and men called religious blind the people, and persuade princes and judges to persecute such as professed Christ Jesus his blessed Gospel. This plain speaking so inflamed them, that after that they thirsted ever for his blood," and in February 1538-39 he and the vicar of Dollar, and two other priests and a notary in Stirling, were condemned to death by the Cardinal, the Chancellor, and Chisholme, Bishop of Dunblane, "without any place for recantation, because, as was alleged, they were heresiarchs, or chief heretics and teachers of heresies."³

2. Buchanan and Lyndsay's services.

Most of our historians now frankly acknowledge the service done in these unquiet times by the tragedies and other poetical compositions of George Buchanan and Sir David Lyndsay, who so fearlessly and mercilessly exposed the vicious lives of clergy and friars—the one in elegant Latin, the other in homely Scottish verse.¹ But there were others who rendered no less essential and signal service to the cause about the same time who have never yet received from their country the grateful acknowledgment which their services merited. They strove not only to pull down what was crumbling, but to build up what might be more stable; not only to remove what was rotten and false, but to set up in purity that pristine Gospel of the grace of God which they believed would once more prove itself to be “the power of God unto salvation.” These were the authors of at least a large part of the collection of sacred songs and ballads, mentioned by several of our writers in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries under the names of the ‘Psalms of Dundee,’ the ‘Psalms of Wedderburn,’ the ‘Godlie and Spirituall Sangs,’ the ‘Gude and Godlie Ballates.’ These seem to have been published in some shape or other—possibly but rudimentary—between the years 1542 and 1546, and they are here reprinted from an earlier edition than has been previously accessible in modern times. Being pervaded by more intense earnestness, and setting forth with fond affection and winning simplicity the great truths of the Gospel, which they tell us had "lang bene hid be craft of men," they were more completely fitted to meet the felt wants of earnest inquirers in those critical times, and, amidst all their conflicts and sufferings, to sustain their faith in God and in His promises.¹ They were by no means deficient in the power of keen irony and satire, and, when occasion called, they used it freely; and they dealt with the failings of the clergy, both high and low, quite as unsparingly, sometimes almost as coarsely, as the Lyon King-at-Arms. But they combined therewith a more avowed and unvarying religious and moral purpose, and a deep and yearning tenderness, which added to their power both of shaming from vice and stimulating to what was holy and good and true. They sought to quicken to purer faith and higher life, as well as to encourage to Christian steadfastness and boldness, even at the risk of imprisonment and martyrdom. Probably the range of their circulation was much more among the middle than among the higher classes of our countrymen, and especially among the substantial burghers of the cities and trading communities;² but among these classes their influence was confessedly great, and along with the occasional but spirit-stirring addresses of their great preachers, contributed to make them, what they long continued to be, the strength and backbone of the Reformed Church. Neither did the range of their circulation diminish after the triumph of the new faith, but, for considerably more than half a century, they continued to be treasured in the hearts of the people, and no doubt sung in their homes, though they never had formal ecclesiastical sanction. They had soothed the chafed spirit of Wishart on the night of his betrayal,¹ had deepened the early piety of the younger Melville while still at school in Montrose,² and comforted the hearts of mourners in that district as they performed the last office of kindness to departed friends,³ in sure hope that they—

And haue immortall lyfe for ay.”

The story of the reputed authors of the collection, or rather of the principal part of it (for the book is anonymous and undoubtedly contains metrical pieces by other authors), cannot even yet be fully told. For though much has been done of late years to vindicate the character of John Knox as one of the truest patriots his country ever had, and to bring into clearer light the sad details of the story of Patrick Hamilton and of George Wishart, and to dissipate the haze which had gathered round the venerable forms of Alexander Alane or Alesius and John M'Alpine or Macchabæus, as well as of George Buchanan, yet I regret to say that the history of these authors still stands in need of further investigation and elucidation, and that with all the time and thought I have given to the subject, I have been able to glean but a very few facts in addition to those which Johnston and Calderwood long ago recorded regarding their personal history, and which Drs M'Crie and Laing have more recently indorsed.

said to have gathered round Gavin Logie¹ to drink of St Leonard's Well between the years 1514 and 1533, there were three brothers bearing the names of James, John, and Robert Wedderburn, sons of James Wedderburn, merchant at the West Kirk stile of Dundee. The surname of Wedderburn is said to be local, and to have been assumed by the proprietors of the lands of Wedderburn in Berwickshire as soon as surnames came into use in Scotland—that is, as Douglas tells us,² as early as the reign of Malcolm III. The Wedderburns of Forfarshire were an offshoot of those of Berwickshire, and had got a good position in Dundee before the middle of the fifteenth century. Before the end of that century there was certainly more than one family of them there, perhaps more than one among the prosperous merchant burgesses of Dundee, having commercial relations with Dieppe and some other foreign ports where Scotsmen had special privileges in trade.

OF THE WEDDER-
BURNS.

Several Angusian³ Wedderburns studied in St Andrews in the early decades of the sixteenth century—three Johns, two or three Jameses, and two Roberts. The last three in the first list below⁴ are the three who are regarded as the authors of the greater part of the book here reprinted. Their father was evidently a man of considerable wealth and reputation, even if he was not in the direct line of the Wedderburns of Blackness;¹ and his son John, on the occasion of his graduation, is entered in the University register as dives. In all probability it had been his cousin, or one of his sons, who aided Alesius² in 1531-32 in effecting his escape from Scotland in a Dundee vessel proceeding to the Continent. The three sons are said by at St Andrews between 1504 and 1530, and is hardly to be explained save on the hypothesis that there were at least two collateral families in Dundee or its neighbourhood of that surname:—

⁴ The following is a list of the Wedderburns who matriculated or graduated

² Alesius had been suspected of sharing the opinions of Patrick Hamilton, and in consequence subjected to very harsh treatment by Prior Hepburn. He escaped from his dungeon, but after his escape he was accused, condemned, and degraded, and "doomed to perpetual banishment from his country." He was spared not only to render essential service to the cause of the Reformation in the land of his adoption, but also, by his writings, to contribute to its progress in the land from which he had been exiled.

Calderwood to have studied under Logie, and to have gained their first knowledge of the new faith from him. But from the University registers it appears that John at any rate was for a time a student in the Pædagogium, or, as it was afterwards designated, St Mary's College, and that too during the very year that Patrick Hamilton was residing at the University, and with George Buchanan and his brother, and probably also Henry Balnaves,¹ was attending on John Major's prelections,—no doubt discussing, with these like-minded youths, the subjects brought before them in the prelections of the old Scottish scholastic. There is no reason to suppose, however, that at that time he acquired anything more than a general dissatisfaction with the old opinions, and a vague liking for the new. In fact, Calderwood tells us that it was only after his return and that of his brothers to their native place, and the instructions there received, that they were led on to fuller acceptance of the new teaching. This seems to have been brought about by Friar Hewat, then in the Dominican monastery at Dundee, but previously in that of Perth under M'Alpine, who for his opinions had already become an exile from his native land.² At length the two oldest brothers openly espoused the new opinions, and having drunk of the Pierian spring, as well as of St Leonard's Well, they used in defence and propagation of their new faith the invaluable gift of poesy, with which God had endowed them. The eldest brother James, though he studied at St Andrews, does not appear to have proceeded to the degree either of Bachelor or Master of Arts. His name occurs in the list of those incorporated into the University in 1514, and Calderwood adds that he studied in St Leonard's College under Logie, and was reasonably well instructed in philosophy and humanity. After leaving college he went for some time to France, no doubt to acquire a knowledge of French and of his profession from some of the Scottish residents settled there, in Rouen or Dieppe. It was mainly through the seaports of the Netherlands and the north of France that the Scottish trade was then carried on. Scottish merchants had factors both at Dieppe and Rouen, and possibly, as I have hinted, the Wedderburns may have already had a branch establishment there. After his return to Dundee James Wedderburn, we are told, composed several tragedies and comedies in his native tongue, in which, as did Buchanan and Lyndsay about the same time, he exposed the corruptions of the clergy and the abuses of the Church. One of these compositions was a mystery, or sacred tragedy¹ on the beheading of John the Baptist, which was acted at the West Port of Dundee. Another was a comedy, compiled out of the history of Dionysius the

Tyrant, which, Calderwood tells us, was acted in the play-field of the same burgh.¹ In both of these plays he lashed the vices of the dominant ecclesiastics, and especially, we may suppose, of those clever, cruel, dissolute monks Prior Patrick Hepburn and Abbot David Betoun, who came to cherish such bitter and lasting enmity towards him and his brothers. No fragment of either of these plays is supposed to have come down to us, but no doubt we have a fair exhibition of their spirit, if not also a sample of their contents, in some of the pieces in the collection I am noticing, and especially in the extract from one of them here subjoined, which, it seems to me, can only apply to James Betoun the aged Archbishop of St Andrews and his two younger protégés, his nephew David, and Prior

¹ "Every town of note had its playfield, where these moralities were performed, some of which, from the pens of the clergy, were intended for the edification of the people, but by far the greater part to excite, by some approach to reality, the passions of the auditory—against their spiritual tyrants." "The getting up," as it is called, of a play was in those days a matter of no great difficulty. The open field or street was the theatre, the stage was the ground or a cart. Simple people are pleased with simple things. The following notice of dramatic properties in the city of Edinburgh in 1554 is taken from an Act of Council: "Ye Provost, Baillies and Counsaile ordanis the thesaurer Ro^t Grahame, to content and pay to Walter Bynning ye sowme of v lib. for ye making of ye playgrund, and paynting of ye handsenzé and ye playaris facis, quhilk beand payit, prouidand always y^t ye said Walter mak ye playgeir undir writtin furtcuman to ye town, quhen yai haif ado y^rw^t, quhilkis he hes now ressauit—viz., viii play hattes, ane kingis crowne, ane myster, ane fulis hude, ane foxis, ane pair angell wyngis, twa angell hair, ane chaplet of tryumphe."—Abridged from Introduction to Dalrymple's 'Scottish Poems,' p. 31, and 'History of Dundee,' 1842, p. 95. But Mr Maxwell, in his more interesting and elaborate work on Old Dundee, gives a list of much more gorgeous properties, belonging to St Mary's Church and used in processions, including, inter alia, "threescore crownis, seven pair of angel wings, three myteris, thirty-one suerdis, twenty hedis of hair, Cristis cott of lathyr, Cristis hed, Abraamis hat, a saw, a ax, a rassour, a gully knyff."—'Old Dundee prior to the Reformation,' p. 383.

Patrick Hepburn, of whose escapades Alesius, as well as Knox, gives such a sad account:—

were still in the height of their power, we can hardly doubt that the sad fate of the latter would have been adduced as a more emphatic warning to his brethren than that of English, "Duche," or Danish prelates.

James Wedderburn, Calderwood further tells us, composed another play, in which he counterfeited the "conjuring of a ghaist," which feat had in sober earnest been attempted at Kinghorn by Friar Laing, who had succeeded Seaton as confessor to James V.; but as that piece of folly had cost the friar his place, so the burlesquing of it is said to have brought on James Wedderburn a life-long exile from his native land. "He was delated to the King, and letters of caption were directed" against him; but he escaped secretly to France, and established himself as a merchant at Rouen or Dieppe, where he lived in prosperity and died in peace. The Scotch factors there, indeed, attempted to stir up the Bishop of Rouen against him, as one who had been convicted of heresy in Scotland, but apparently without success, as they could produce no document instructing his conviction. He retained his opinions, though probably privately,¹ to the last, and counselled his son to follow them out more resolutely. Possibly it was the presence of Wedderburn, and some other like-minded Scottish merchants at Dieppe and Rouen, which cheered the heart of Knox under the hardships he had to endure when a prisoner in the French galleys, and which, along with the powerful intercession of the English Government, ultimately secured his liberation; and it may have been that the presence of such like-minded countrymen was one reason of his making Dieppe, once and again in subsequent years, his resting-place in his journeys to and from Geneva.

(b) Robert Wedderburn.

Robert, the youngest of the three brothers, was incorporated into St Leonard's College in the year 1526, and seems to have taken his Bachelor's degree in 1529 and his Master's in 1530. From his name heading the list of graduates on both occasions, though it was not entitled to come first in alphabetical order, we seem warranted to infer that he was a distinguished student; and Calderwood expressly states that he excelled his brother both in classical learning and in Scriptural knowledge. He was early admitted to priest's orders, and in time "succeeded to his uncle as Vicar of Dundee," and continued to hold the office till his death in 1553. He also, at least during the life of the Cardinal, had to secure his safety by fleeing to a foreign land, spending part of the time in France, where he may have attended the University of Paris, and part in Germany, where, like his brother John, he may have attended at Wittenberg, but ultimately, if one might conjecture from the course he took on his return home, at Frankfort on the Oder, though his name does not appear in the matriculation lists of either University. Alesius had been Professor there in 1540-41, and Fyffe or Fidelis, another St Leonard's exile,¹ held the same office from 1547 to 1562. Robert Wedderburn returned to Scotland in 1546, possibly anticipating the death of the Cardinal, which he heard on his arrival had just taken place. But he remained for the most part with the Laird of Calder, who was one of the strongest supporters of the new teaching. He is said to have superintended the editing of the godly and spiritual songs after his brother's death, and to have added to the book the "augmentation of sindrie gude and godlie ballatis not contenit in the first editioun," and also to have provided for the various metres appropriate tunes. But if the date of John's death is correctly given by Johnston, he outlived his brother Robert. Still, the latter may have made these additions after his brother's second expatriation and his own return in 1546.

It has been claimed for him that he was the author of a far more remarkable book—'The Complaynt of Scotland.' Mr Laing has strongly supported his claim to this honour. Dr Murray has opposed it. Mr Maxwell, in his 'Old Dundee prior to the Reformation,' has endeavoured at some length to rebut his arguments, and with no little ingenuity. It is certainly noteworthy that his name in the St Andrews matriculation list is entered in the same form as is the name of the author of the 'Complaynt' in Heber's Catalogue—viz., Vedderburne, and not Wedderburn. One familiar with the scenery in the neighbourhood of Dundee can have no hesitation also in admitting that it corresponds wonderfully with that described in the 'Complaynt.' But the spelling is altogether of a different type from that of the 'Gude and Godlie Ballates.'¹ And Vedderburne must have been a veritable

Vicar of Bray if he could first appear in 1547 as a supporter of the English alliance, then in 1549 take the opposite side both in State and Church politics, and some years later, when preparing the 'Augmentation of syndrie Gude and Godlie Ballates' for the second edition of his brother's book, should wheel round again to his first convictions, and, after all, die a vicar in the old Church.

burn.*

John, the second of the three brothers, is also said to have studied under Gavin Logie in St Leonard's College, and it is barely possible that he may have done so for a year; but in the University books, as already mentioned, his name appears among those alumni incorporated into what was then the Pædagogium, and afterwards became St Mary's College, and that, too, in the very year when several other Scottish worthies were also there, and John Major was lecturing on theology as well as philosophy—perhaps giving some of those prelections on the Gospels which he published afterwards in Paris. In the following year he appears among the Determinants from the Pædagogium, but though he took his Bachelor's degree in 1526, he only took the degree of Master in 1528. His course, therefore, at St Andrews was passed during the years which Patrick Hamilton spent chiefly there; and no doubt he was brought in contact with him, and may have had his love of sacred song quickened by association with him and the younger canons, who were then giving special attention to sacred music. Nor is it unlikely that he, as well as Alesius, may have witnessed that sad tragedy which was enacted at the gates of St Salvator's College on the last day of February 1527-28, when the amiable and youthful martyr endured those six hours of terrible agony ere he passed to his rest and reward, and that it was the deep impression then made on his spirit which led him to indite such verses as the following :—

“ *Thay brint, and heryit Christin men,
And flemit thame full far ;
Thay said, thay did bot erre,
That spak of the Commandementis ten,
Or red the word of Jesus Christ.*

“ *Heretykis thay did vs call,
Curssand vs nycht and day,
The treuth durst na man say ;
Trew Preichouris war forbidden all
To schaw the word of Jesus Christ.”*

The impression made on John Wedderburn's spirit by what he heard and saw in St Andrews was deepened by his intercourse with Friar Hewat after his return to his native place, and before many years elapsed he made no secret of his adherence to the new faith. He had been persuaded, however, by his friends to enter into priest's orders, and for a short time he may have acted as a priest in Dundee ;¹ but when he learned the way of

¹ It has been supposed to be to him that the following notice in one of our early chroniclers refers : “ In the year 1530 Lord William Howard came as ambassador from Henry VIII. to his nephew James V., attended by a large retinue. They were skilled in archery and other games, as most Englishmen in that age were. For their entertainment a trial of skill in archery was proposed between them and the Scots, to take place at St Andrews. The Queen-Dowager, sister of Henry, staked a hundred crowns and a tun of wine on the English, and King James on the Scots. The contest took place at St Andrews, the Scottish champions being three landed men, David Wemyss of that ilk, David Arnot of that ilk, and Mr John Wedderburn, Vicar of Dundee, with three yeomen. They shot very near, and waured the Englishmen of the enterprise, and wan the hundred crowns and the tun of wine, which made the king very merry that his men wan the victory.” But it may be questioned, perhaps, if this does not rather apply to the John Wedderburne who entered St Salvator's College in 1504, or the one who entered in 1507, and is probably to be identified with him who, according to Douglas ('Baronage,' 578), was Town Clerk of Dundee, much in favour with James V., and the hero of the

God more perfectly, he made open profession of his faith, and in consequence of this profession, possibly disclosed by some overt act in that field of literature, in which he ultimately gained his fame—the divulging of some of his ballads,—he was summoned before the ecclesiastical authorities on a charge of heresy. Whether he actually appeared in answer to the summons, and was convicted on trial, and then succeeded in effecting his escape, or whether, like his brother James, he fled before trial, has not been quite definitely ascertained. The latter supposition seems more accordant with the statement of Calderwood; but the former is certainly more in consonance with the entries respecting so-called heretics, extracted by Dr M'Crie from the books of the King's Treasurer, and given at length in note H, appended to his 'Life of Knox.' It is there expressly said of a number of the persons mentioned that they were fugitive, and held confessed; but of Maister John Wedderburn it is said that he had been "convicted of certain charges of heresy,"¹ and his goods in consequence escheated to above contest. He, like Wemyss and Arnot, was a landed proprietor. It was he also, I suppose, who had a respite, granted under the Privy Seal on 3rd April 1529, for the slaughter of John Thomson, to last for the space of nineteen years, I doubt also if the similar respite, granted to a Robert Wedderburn on 6th January 1537-38, can be referred to the Robert who graduated in 1530, and does not rather refer to another Robert not M.A.

¹ Perhaps the following lines may have some reference to a temporary lapse in his own case, as they certainly have to that of the other Dundee citizens not only convicted but "abjurit" in the years 1538, 1539—viz., James Annand, George Annand, Robert Anderson, John Flescheour, Alexander Flescheour, Thomas Kyd, Robert Paterson, Alexander Wannand, and John Duncan (M'Crie's 'Knox,' note H):—

"At midnycht myrk thay will vs tak,
And in to presoun will vs fling,
Thair mon we ly, quhill we forsaik
The name of God, quhillk is our King.

"Than faggottis man we burne or beir,
Or to the deid thay will vs bring;
It dois thame gude to do vs deir,
And to confusioun vs downe thring."

"The publick ceremonie of recanting in these times was to beare a faggot his majesty's use, who had been pleased for a small composition to make a gift of them to his brother Henry. From another entry in the same books we learn that in March 1538-39 a "pursevant" or king's messenger had been directed to pass to Dundee and "serche James Rollokkis gudis, and Maister Johanne Wedderburnis." This entry unquestionably furnishes the reason for the former one, though as being part of his discharge it is inserted in a later part of the treasurer's books. In connection with the punishment inflicted, it renders it very probable that the charge on which Rollok and of drie sticks and burne it publicklye, to signifie that they were destroying that which sould have been the instrument of their death."—Calderwood, vol. i. p. 109. The following are the forms of accusation and abjuration drawn up about that date in the "vulgar tongue," as given in the St Andrews MS. Formulare.:—

1. "Forma accusationis in lingua vulgari.—This I say to thé N. be the autorité of o^r haly moder the Kirk, my Lord Cardinale and Archbishop of Sanctandrois, Juge ordinar heir sittand, w^t the assistance of y^e reverend faderis in God, my lordis prelati, and venerabil clerkis and doctoris heir present, That thou N. The grievous restrictions imposed on those who had been convicted of heresy, and had abjured and done penance, will be referred to afterwards, as well as the harder measure meted out to those who, on being suspected and summoned, had fled from trial.

Wedderburn were convicted was that of having in their possession heretical books or ballads. From this entry being included in the books for the same year as the other, the natural conclusion is that John Wedderburn's trial and flight took place early in 1539, and not, as Calderwood has it, in 1540. At any rate, he succeeded in effecting his escape from his persecutors, and after a short time he found his way to Wittemberg, that school of the prophets, which was then attracting so many noble and earnest young men from various lands.¹ There he was soon joined by his countrymen, Fyffe and M'Alpine, exiles from their native land for the same sacred cause as himself, and with them drank in the truth as it flowed fresh from the heart and lips of Luther and Melanchthon, and revived his spirit by Christian intercourse with them, as well as by deep draughts from the precious stream then being poured forth from the long-sealed fountain of sacred song. The influence of these happy years on John Wedderburn seems to have been specially marked, and to the opportunities he then enjoyed we must ascribe the firm grasp he got and retained of the vital principles of the evangelical theology, which he iterates and reiterates in his poetical compositions with singular persistence and prominence. So marked are these peculiarities that even when his poems are close translations he at times departs from the original to set forth more clearly and simply the way of salvation through the atoning death and justi-fyng righteousness of the Lord Jesus Christ, so that even the most heedless, who might peruse his hymns or ballads, might be left without excuse, if they continued to neglect the Saviour's free offers of mercy.

On the return of the King and his trusted Counsellor from France in 1537, the same repressive and remorseless policy they had seen in operation there was adopted in Scotland, to the regret of not a few who still clung to the Old Church, and to the sore distress of those who had abandoned it. But though cast down, they were neither cowed nor crushed even by the cruel penal statutes enacted against them by the Parliament of 1540-41;¹ and when the misguided monarch virtually died of a broken heart, and the Cardinal's intrigue to possess himself of the supreme power in the State as well as in the Church was foiled, the regency fell into the hands of one who professed to be friendly to the cause of the Reformation,² and who invited

¹ The only Acts of Parliament against heresies previously in force were the one of 1525 against the "damnable opunzeons of the heretic Lutherus and his discipillis," and that of 1535 for "eschewing of heresy, and the pains therof." Those of 1540-41 were much more severe and detailed: 1. "For honour of the haly sacramentis . . . conforme to the lawis and doctryne of haly Kirk." 2. "That the glorius virgine Marie . . . be our all this realme reverendlie worschippit, . . . and that prayeris be maid to her." 3. "That na maner of persoun argun or impung the Papis autorité, under the pane of deid and confiscatioun of all thair gudis movable and unmovable." 4. "For reforming of Kirkis and kirkmen." 5. "That na private conventionis be maid to disput on the Scriptour." 6. "Of personis abjurit of heresy and admittit lauchfullie to penance, that nane of thai sall convers or comone with utheris," [nor] "sall exerss, haif, or brouk ony honest . . . degree or office, spirituall nor temporale." 7. "Fugitives suspect and summond for herisy . . . salbe baneist and condemnit as heretics, and it sall not be leful to na man to . . . mak supplicatioun for thair purgatioun, . . . under the pane to be puneist as favoraris of heretics, and the saidis personis fugitives not to be admittit to purgatioun." 8. "Reward of them that revelis conventiounis and accusis heretikis."

² The balance of parties at this critical juncture was more nearly equal than is generally supposed. "An active minority of the nobles and gentry saw in the government of Betoun not only their own personal ruin, but the giving home the banished nobles, and winked at, if he did not encourage, the return of the exiled and fugitive Protestants. Early in the following year he allowed to pass through Parliament an Act permitting the Scriptures to be read in the vernacular, and caused it to be published at the market-cross of the chief burghs of the kingdom. Among the exiles who hastened to return to their native land, supposing that the hour of its deliverance was at hand, came John Wedderburn, with his harp strung and tuned to sing in fitting Scottish verse those noble songs which had touched his own heart in exile, as they had touched and moved the hearts of the German people, and, amidst all their wanderings, have continued to do so down to the present day.

(a) Its Origin.

It is principally to John, the second of this noble band of brothers, that we owe, in its rudimentary form, the 'Compendious Book of Psalms and Spiritual Songs,' the wide circulation and great influence of which, in those years of peril that preceded the ultimate triumph of the Reformation, are acknowledged by Row and Calderwood, and several of our ecclesiastical historians in more recent away of the country to a power more dangerous to its liberties than England itself. With those who favoured England were naturally associated those who desired a reformation of religion, a body now so numerous in the opinion of a papal legate [Grimani] who visited the country in 1543, that but for the interposition of God, Scotland would soon be in as bad a case as England itself."—Hume Brown's 'John Knox,' vol. i. p. 65. The reference to Grimani's opinion is taken from Stevenson's 'Mary Stuart,' p. 51. Archibald Hamilton, writing many years later of this crisis, says frankly that the governor Hamilton not only recalled from exile those whom King James had banished, but "se totum illorum consiliis regendum permiserit. . . . Quo factum est ut quam minimum abfuerit quin, abrogatâ Ecclesiastica potestate, Anglorum heresin . . . vel tunc secum invexissent. . . . Si ea paulo diutius durassent consilia, jam pridem de Ecclesia Scoticana actum fuisset." See the whole passage in his 'Confusionis Calvinianæ Demonstratio,' f. 16.

times. In all likelihood it had been begun while he was still abroad, and using those songs of the German Church, to which we shall find that many of his own bear a close resemblance—possibly on the suggestion of the same wise and thoughtful counsellor who had encouraged Alesius to contend so strenuously for the free circulation of the Word of God in Scotland,¹ the good and gentle Melancthon,—to whom through these his two pupils our native country owes a debt of gratitude which its historians have hitherto been slow to acknowledge. What part of the collection first appeared, and when and where it was published, cannot now be definitely ascertained. The earliest edition known till recently was that of 1578, reprinted by the late Mr David Laing, which makes distinct reference to an earlier but less extensive one. A copy of an earlier edition since brought to light² is at least ten years older; but the three or four pieces it lacks, of those found in the edition

(b) Early editions of Book.

² My lecture in Broughty Ferry in the spring of 1867 was the means of drawing this from the obscurity in which it had long lurked. An old bookseller in Dundee with whom I had for long had dealings informed me that a friend of his was very anxious to show me an old book, which he thought would interest me. I need not say how overjoyed I was, when I found not only that it was a copy of an old edition of Wedderburn’s book, but also of an older edition than had been previously known. The owner kindly allowed me to take it with me, and after carefully examining it, and urging the University, but without success, to secure the treasure, I persuaded my honoured friend, Mr of 1578,¹ could hardly have been described as an “augmentation of sindry gude and godlie ballates”; so that we cannot but conclude that there was an earlier, perhaps more than one earlier, and more rudimentary form of the book. The probability is that, as was the case in Germany, some of the hymns and ballads may have been printed separately, and sold through the country soon after the author’s return to Dundee, or made known by wandering minstrels, who sung or declaimed them,—perhaps two or three which make reference to the disagreement and consequent hostilities between Henry VIII. and James V., or to the breach of the treaty for the marriage of Prince Edward of England with the Princess Mary of Scotland, brought about through the intrigues of the Cardinal and the clerical party, or to the repeated wars between the two countries, and the destruction of religious houses, not only in the south of Scotland by the incursions of the English, but also in the neighbourhood of Dundee itself by the supporters of the Reformation² and the English alliance—one or two also which allude to the refusal of the Popish prelates to consent to hold a council for the reformation of the Church, and the one already quoted,

Patrick Anderson, to purchase it and secure it permanently for Dundee—promising, if spared, to get it reprinted. This, through the kindness of his representatives and of the Scottish Text Society, I have at last been enabled to do.

and apparently addressed to the head of the Scottish clergy. Then, as Dr M'Crie has observed, some of the Psalms in the collection, and probably therefore the collection itself in a rudimentary form, must have been published before the death of Wishart, as it is expressly stated by Knox in his history that, on the night in which he was apprehended, the martyr had sung part of the fifty-first Psalm in Scottish metre; and the two lines which Knox quotes coincide with no other known version of this Psalm than the long paraphrase of it found in the second part of the 'Godlie and Spirituall Sangs.' Moreover, as we do not hear of any overt act by which John Wedderburn could have so exasperated the clergy that he should have been obliged again to flee from his native country and to remain in exile till his death, it is only natural to conclude that this was owing to the publication of his spiritual songs and ballads, and to the indignation, thereby excited against him, among the clergy.

This seems to be put beyond doubt by an Act of the Privy Council, first printed by Dr Joseph Robertson in his 'Statuta Ecclesiæ Scoticanæ,' which was issued by the Regent Arran only two months after he had given consent to the Act of Parliament allowing the Scriptures to be read in the vulgar tongue: "Because slanderous bills, writings, ballates, and books are daily made, written, and prentit to the diffamation of all estatis both spiritual and temporal, and giffes occasion to ilk ane to leichtlie and contem vthers, . . . for remeid hereof it is statut and ordanit that na manner of man tak upon hand to make, write, or imprint ony sic bills, writings, ballatis, . . . under the paine of deid and confiscioun of all their gudis move-

This the provost delayed to do, but being further pressed, rather than comply “he renuncit his office of provost” for a time.³ Of course Wedderburn was one of the “condampnit heretics” who are pointed at in the Act of Privy Council as having dared without leave to come again into the realm.

The internal evidence supplied by the contents of several of the ballads to the same effect has already been referred to. But more special reference must be made to the funeral hymn previously mentioned at p. xvi, and given at length on pp. 163-165. It was one of the hymns which came to the Germans from the land of Hus. As originally introduced it consisted of seven verses, to which in the Magdeburg hymn-book¹ of 1540 an eighth verse was added. This is the twelfth in the Scottish version of the hymn, and between the seventh and eighth verses of the German, four original verses are introduced bearing manifest reference to the circumstances of Dundee during the years 1544-45, when John Wedderburn the poet and John Scot the printer were there, and when the town had been visited, first by the Regent and Cardinal, with troops to overawe and punish the so-called heretics, and then, like several other towns of Scotland, by the plague. The evangelist who shortly before had been inhibited in the Queen and Governor's name to preach any more to them, returned at once to comfort them in their sore extremity, and from the East Port of the town, with the sick outside the Port and the whole within, preached that famous sermon of which his admiring disciple Knox has given the following sympathetic account: "The text . . . he took fra the hundreth and sevin Psalme; the sentence thareof, 'He send his woorde and healed thame;' and tharewith joyned these woordis, 'It is neather herbe nor plaster, O Lord, butt thy woord healleth all.' It would almost seem as if the poet had been present at that sermon, and under the emotions it had called forth had set himself to insert the following verses in the funeral hymn:—

- 8 "Quhen cumin is our hour and tyme,

¹ In that remarkable treatise 'The Complaynt of Scotland'—originally published, as is now supposed, in France about 1549, and republished first by Dr Leyden in 1801, and again by Dr Murray in 1872—it has been asserted that seven at least of the songs there mentioned are contained in the 'Gude and Godlie Ballates,' and that the mention of them in the 'Complaynt' is evidence that these 'Ballates' had been printed before 1549. Even Sir J. G. Dalryell seems to endorse this; but both Dr Leyden and Dr Murray are inclined to hold

There can be as little doubt that Wedderburn's book was one, if not the chief, of those aimed at in the canon made at the council of the Scottish clergy in 1549, wherein it was enjoined that search should be made in the several dioceses for those who retain in their possession any books of rhymes or ballads, containing either scandalous charges against the clergy and their constitutions, or any heresy; that the books when found should be confiscated and burned, and that the sale, printing, and reading of them should be prohibited under the severe pains contained in the Acts of Parliament. The Acts of Parliament, however, previous to this date, had not expressly prohibited metrical productions as distinct from heretical books generally. But the Acts of subsequent Parliaments¹ do so; and yet, notwithstanding this and the canons of subsequent ecclesiastical councils, the 'Compendious Book of Godlie and Spirituall Sangs' was not only not extinguished, but even more firmly maintained its place in the hearts and households of the Scottish people. In the course of the succeeding half-century it passed through several editions, of four that the songs mentioned in the 'Complaynt' are not those found in the 'Gude and Godlie Ballates,' but the secular or profane songs which are therein spiritualised. But even if this were clearly made out, there remains to be accounted for, among the dances enumerated, "Al Cristyn mennis dance," of which no possible explanation can be given, save that it refers to the 'Gude and Godlie Ballate'—

"Be blyith all Christin men and sing, Dance and mak myrth with all your mycht," which is a translation of one of Luther's earliest hymns, the tune of which was a secular tune, picked up by him, it is said, from a wandering minstrel. That could only have come to be known in Scotland from its association with this "sang of the Euangell."

of which at least one copy still remains. It was not till after the first quarter of the seventeenth century that it fell into oblivion. Even Calderwood seems to have had but an indistinct notion of the circumstances in which it originated; and our Church historians ever since, if they have condescended to notice it at all, have generally contented themselves with a very meagre, if not contemptuous, reference to its contents and historical relations.

1. Dal-yell's re-print of 1621 edition.

2. Mr Laing's reprint of 1578 edition.

In 1765 a selection of the satirical pieces it contains was edited by Lord Hailes,¹ and about the beginning of the present century a larger one by Sibbald;² the whole were reprinted from the edition of 1621, with a historical introduction by Sir J. G. Dalryell.³ The editor, however, did not fully understand some of the historical allusions in the book, nor even the allusion of Calderwood as to its origin, substituting for his words, "he translated many of the dytements of Luther into Scottish verse," the words, "he translated many of the principles of Luther into Scottish verse." Mr David Laing (to whom we owe reprints of so many valuable works of the sixteenth century) in 1868 republished the book⁴ from the edition of 1578, the earliest edition then known to him; and it goes without saying that the work was a most decided advance on the previous reprints, and was fully and accurately illustrated by the learned notes of the editor. He had my full permission to make what use he chose of the material I had gathered together in my lecture on the 'Wedderburns and their Work,' which had been published by Messrs Blackwood & Sons in the previous year, and in the conclusion of his preface he generously acknowledged his obligations to that lecture.¹

My thoughts were first specially turned to the book in the summer of 1866 by finding several pieces from it inserted at length in a very interesting volume of 'Catechisms of the Scottish Reformation,' published some time before by the Rev. Dr Horatius Bonar. I do not know whether it was that the spirit of contradiction had been roused in me, by what appeared to be a somewhat needless depreciation of Luther's Catechism, and a rather unmeasured laudation of Wedderburn's as so far in advance of it, or whether my zest after such correspondences had been unusually quickened by some other discoveries I had lighted on shortly before, but so it was that when I turned from Dr Bonar's preface to the extracts he gave from the first part of Wedderburn's metrical Catechism, I was at once startled by the fact that the Commandments appeared to be given in the Lutheran or Roman form—i.e., the first and second, as we and the Greek Church reckon them, being united into one, and what we reckon the tenth being split into two; and further, that if the doctrine taught in Wedderburn's hymns on Baptism and the Lord's Supper was not narrowly Lutheran, it was not markedly at variance with that which Luther taught. Then, on further examination, the measure and ring of the metrical version of the Apostles' Creed brought to mind Luther's famous hymn on the same subject, and the last hymn extracted from the collection by Dr Bonar at once brought to mind a hymn of the same era which is still sung at funerals in Germany, and has been translated into English in our own day by Miss Winkworth. By a reference to my German hymn-book, I soon satisfied myself that three of the nine poetical pieces extracted by Dr Bonar from Wedderburn's book were pretty close translations from the German, and that other three, though less close, yet by the similarity of their metre, and by numerous verbal coincidences, gave unmistakable evidence of a similar origin. The metrical graces and the other three longer pieces, extracted by Dr Bonar, I did not, with the materials then at my command,¹ succeed in tracing to the same source. When in Edinburgh in the course of the summer I brought the subject and my conjectures respecting it under the notice of Mr Laing, to whose more extensive knowledge on all questions connected with the history and literature of our Reformation I had been accustomed to defer, and of whose kind counsel I have often availed myself in similar circumstances. But he did not appear to have had his attention specially called to it before, or to have heard of any such close relation being traced between these Scottish and the old German hymns, and could only suggest that possibly the resemblances might be satisfactorily accounted for by the derivation of both Scottish and German hymns from the Latin. So the matter rested till the end of autumn, when it occurred to me that the subject was one which, in my then infirm state of health, I might prosecute with interest and yet without exhaustive mental labour. Accordingly I sought for materials to carry out the inquiry, and particularly for an old German hymn-book¹ and Wackernagel's 'Deutsches Kirchenlied' of 1841, and some of his other valuable works on the bibliography of German hymns.² A repeated and careful examination of these works enabled me to trace fully one-half of the compositions contained in the first part of Wedderburn's book to German sources, several of them, though executed with much taste and poetic spirit, being rendered almost line for line; others, being far more free as well as spirited translations or adaptations, and several evidently composed when the translator's muse was in a less auspicious mood, giving indications of their origin only by general similarity, occasional verbal coincidences, and the use of the same metre and refrain as the corresponding German hymns. On closer examination of the book itself, I found it contained a notice which it seems strange should have previously attracted so little attention. It is at the end of what I have called the first part of the book, and runs as follows: "Heir endis the Spirituall Sangis, and beginnis the Psalmes of Daudid, with vther new plesand Ballatis, as efter followis. Translatit out of Enchiridion Psalmorum, to be sung." It was plain, therefore, that whatever might be the case with the hymns which preceded, those which followed fell to be regarded as translations from some previously existing work, and yet this was the fact, to which no attention seemed to have been given before, that these Psalms were but translations of some other metrical version.

The question naturally arose, But what is this 'Enchiridion Psalmorum'? The friend to whom I had recourse in my difficulties was, even with his great knowledge of the books and history of the time, unable to solve this question for me, and in despair I tried to cut, if not to loose, the Gordian knot. The careful examination of the bibliographical treatises of Wackernagel revealed to me the fact that between the years 1524 and 1545 a large number of hymn-books bearing the general name of 'Enchiridion' or 'Handbüchlein,' and more commonly 'Enchiridion geistlicher Gesänge und Psalmen,' issued from the German press, generally containing in their first part some such collection of hymns or spiritual songs as is given in the first part of Wedderburn's book, and in their second part "Psalmen und Lieder," which may without much forcing be rendered "Psalmes and Ballatis." The first of these was published at Erfurt in 1524,¹ and it is in another of them, published at the same place in 1528,² that the version of the second Psalm, pretty freely rendered by Wedderburn and placed at the head of this second part of his book, is supposed to have first appeared. It is rather, however, to one of the Strassburg or Magdeburg hymn-books that I am disposed to trace this second part of Wedderburn's book, in so far as it is a translation from the German; and both these, so far as their versions of the Psalms are concerned, are derived chiefly from a Swiss hymn-book, published at Zürich in the year 1536, which has now so completely disappeared that even Wackernagel in the earlier edition of his 'Kirchenlied' was not able to give its exact title.¹ I thought it was probably to one of these Enchiridia that reference was made in the notice quoted above. The only other conjecture which occurred to me on the subject, and which I am now disposed to regard with greater favour than I did at first, was that this 'Enchiridion Psalmorum' was the name of a Latin prose translation of the Psalms from which the German metrical versions had originally been made, and that in this instance Wedderburn has simply retained and translated what he found in his German hymn-books. A Latin prose translation of the Psalms with the above title existed at least as early as 1533, and is specifically referred to in several German hymn-books, though not so frequently as the prose translation by Joannes Campensis, which, however, was often printed in parallel columns with the other. This was followed in the German metrical Psalter of 1537; and I am now able to add that a typographical error in a later edition² of this 'Enchiridion' is probably the explanation of one rather remarkable deviation of Wedderburn's translation of the same Psalm lxxix. from the original. In that edition the Campensian version of v. 8 runs, Ne scelerum memor esse velis in malum nostrum, aquæ antehac commisimus, &c. This aquæ, it is at once apparent, is a misprint for quæ, which is the reading of other editions of the book, and it is out of this misprinted word that the Scottish poet has elaborated the beautiful simile referred to on p. lix.

The following is a brief account of the contents of the 'Compendious Book.' The edition of 1578 has, like several of the early Scottish Psalm-books, a calendar prefixed. The book proper commences with the Catechism, containing the elementary instruction, which was intended to be specially impressed on the minds of the young and ignorant, and in order that it might be so and also be more effectually retained in their memories, was given in a metrical as well as in a prose form. The text of the Ten Commandments, the Apostles' Creed, and the Lord's Prayer, as well as the Scriptural account of the institution of Baptism, of the Lord's Supper, and of the power of the Keys is placed first, and is taken, not from any English version of the Scriptures with which I am acquainted, but rather from Luther's German version, though there is one peculiar rendering which is hardly to be accounted for even thus. The reading given in editions 1600 and 1621¹ enables us apparently to solve this difficulty. In the extract of the prose translation of Titus iii., instead of the words "according to hope this is true," they read "according to the hope that is true," which was possibly meant as a translation of the old Zürich German version of the passage, which does not, like our English version, read that we should be made "heirs according to the hope of eternal life," but that we should be made "heirs of eternal life," and connects the words "according to the hope" with those that follow — “Das wir erben syind des ewigen läbens, nach der hoffnung, das ist ye gewisslich wahr.”¹

After these six prose Stücke come five corresponding metrical hymns, three of which are pretty close yet spirited translations of Luther's hymns on the Creed, Baptism, and the Lord's Supper. The stanza and refrain of the metrical version of the Ten Commandments are the same as Luther's, and the First and Second Commandments, as previously mentioned, are joined together as in Luther's hymn; but the detailed explanation of the individual Commandments is not closely similar, and the first verse more closely resembles another German metrical version among the ten given by Wackernagel in his ‘Deutsches Kirchenlied.’ The metrical version of the Lord's Prayer, though composed in the same stanza as Luther's and several other of the German versions, does not in details very closely resemble any of them which I have yet seen. But it is rather remarkable that while the versions of the Ten Commandments and the Creed appended to Knox's Psalter are taken from the French-Genevan Psalter, the version of the Lord's Prayer which follows them is a singularly faithful yet spirited translation of Luther's version, not unworthy to stand side by side with any of the modern English translations of it. The hymn on the sixth article of the Catechism — i.e., the “office of the Keys” and “the virtue of holy absolution”—usually given in German hymn-books, is not found in the Scotch, though, as noticed above, the prose statement on this subject has been retained. This would seem to show either that this hymn was not deemed suited to the latitude of Scotland,

¹ Zürich Bible of 1531, as if das were a misprint for die. But most editions put a colon between hoffnung and das.

or was soon expunged as being found unsuitable. To these five hymns succeed various metrical graces to be said before and after meat, several of which may be found in old German hymn-books, and the longest of which still holds its place in some modern German hymnals. The spiritual songs, proper, of the Scotch book begin with two confessions of sin, followed by a song of the contest between the flesh and the spirit, and another of the Cross and the fruit thereof, the last three of which are pretty close versions of German hymns given by Wackernagel, while the first bears considerable resemblance to one which probably also had a place in early German hymnals.¹ After these follow rather lengthy paraphrases of the parables of the Prodigal Son, and the Rich Man and Lazarus,—abridgments of German metrical paraphrases of these passages of Scripture which were in circulation by the year 1536. To these succeed a metrical version of the history of our Lord's Passion—a pretty close rendering of an old German hymn still to be found in some modern hymnals, and "Ane Sang of the E'vangel and the fruit thereof," which is a less close but more spirited translation of what was long deemed to be the first hymn composed by Luther, but recently has been assigned to the second place.² The Scotch translation opens with the lines to

¹ It is found in the Danish 'Handbog med Psalmer oc aandelige lofsange' of 1536, and in the Swedish hymn-books, many of the hymns of which are translations from the German. As it has cost me some trouble to hunt it out, I subjoin the first four lines of the Scotch version alongside of the Danish :

Sere I complaine of Sin
And with King David weip,
I feill my hart within
The wraith of God full deip.

Beklage aff all mijn synde maa ieg mett Koning Daidt, Ieg kau thet oc befinde
mijn Gudt handt war meg wredt.

² This has only been settled recently. It held the first place among Luther's hymns in Wackernagel's 'Deutsches Kirchenlied' of 1841, and Bunsen regarded it as still fundamentally the first—the beautiful verses on the two martyrs of Brussels being rather a poem than a hymn for congregational worship.

which I stated there is undoubted allusion in the 'Complaynt of Scotland.' Next come four hymns on the Incarnation and Birth of Christ, three of which still hold their places in German hymn-books, and are among the finest of the many hymns on this subject which the German churches possess. The Scottish version of the first of them, though now antiquated in language, is quite worthy, in respect of pathos and poetic merit, to take its place side by side with the two beautiful versions of it published in English in our own day. The second, third, and fourth of these hymns came to the German Church through the Latin; but the resemblance of the Scotch versions to the German, in their variations from the Latin, is too marked to leave any doubt that they, like so many of the others, are taken directly from the German. The second of these hymns contains one stanza which is not found in the common German copies. The third is one of the wildest liltis which the medieval Church possessed, and its odd mixture of Scotch and Latin is a faithful reproduction of the mixture of German and Latin which was the favourite form of this hymn in Germany in the sixteenth century.¹ It, as well as the fourth, of these Christmas hymns, contains some glaring typographical errors, which a reference to the German originals enables us to correct.² These four hymns are succeeded by a

¹ And not quite in desuetude even yet. When two of our German missionaries, who had been barbarously used by the Emperor of Abyssinia, came to Scotland in 1868 to tell of their sufferings, they sung it repeatedly to me to the old tune, as did also Mr Späth, our mission-teacher at Smyrna.

² As dulce for dulci, principio for præsepio, and at least according to one edition victorie for veritie. song of thanksgiving to God for once more spreading among men the knowledge of His Word, a pretty close rendering of a German hymn attributed to Speratus, and specially admired by Luther; also by a metrical version of the "Song of Simeon," which is in the same stanza as that of Luther, and is probably a free rendering of it, or of one of the other German versions modelled on it. After these comes a brief hymn entitled "Ane Sang of the Resurrection," which is the only one in the first part of the book of which I think myself warranted to say with confidence that it is more immediately derived from the Latin than the German. It more closely resembles a Latin hymn attributed to Herman Bonn, and found in the Magdeburg hymn-book of 1542, than any of the German versions of it that have come under my notice.

The first part of the Scotch book then winds up with a number of more miscellaneous pieces, ballads, carols, graces, and a few hymns. They may probably have been a later addition, as they contain another cycle of Christmas and Easter hymns, and of graces before and after meat. I have as yet succeeded in tracing only four or five of them to German sources, but I am not without hope that some more patient investigator may be able to identify several of the others with German or Latin originals, and that the publications of the Early English Text Society may yet show that some others are of English origin.

The second part of the 'Compendious Book' is, as already mentioned, avowedly a translation, and mainly from German sources. It consists chiefly of a selection of psalms—viz., 2, 12, 13, 15, 23, 33, 37, 64, 73, 83, 91, 114,

115, 124, 130, 137, 145, 79, 51, 128, 67, 31¹—and several hymns not inferior in pathos and poetical merit to any of those contained in the former part, and most of which are also translations from the German. After this selection of psalms and hymns there follows what may be termed a third part, containing religious adaptations of profane or secular songs, and also a number of ballads exposing in a very pithy and effective manner the sad corruptions and abuses tolerated in the old Church. To a considerable extent they are free from the coarseness which characterises several of the poems of Sir David Lyndsay and Sempill, and from the fierce revengeful spirit, evinced by several of the English poets of the same era, and which the hardships inflicted on the author and his friends would to some extent have palliated. The idea of some even of these ballads may have been suggested by German Volkslieder on the same subjects, but the most of them are no doubt original, or rather a grotesque spiritualising of Scottish secular songs now all but forgotten. It is not at all unlikely that some of them at first made their appearance as broadsheets, and had a partial circulation in that form before obtaining a place in the ‘Compendious Book.’ This portion of it is undoubtedly a miscellany or collection of the poems of different unknown authors, even if the previous parts of it are to be regarded as almost entirely the work of John Wedderburn and his brothers. Certainly there ought to have been prefixed to it some such rubric as that put before the concluding portion of an old Constance hymn-book : “Hienach folgen die Geistlichen gesänge und Christlichen lieder, deren etliche in den Kirchen, vor oder nach den predigen ; etliche aber allein, ausserhalb, und statt der üppigen und schändlichen wältliedern gesungen werden.”¹

The German Psalter of 1537, previously referred to, contains among the appended Lieder “ein gespräch des sünders und Christi,” which possibly supplied the Wedderburns with the materials for spiritualising the old song “Quho is at my windo? who? who?” Possibly even the idea of the famous ballad “The Paip, that pagane full of pryd,” may have been taken from the German “Nun treiben wir den Pabst heraus”; but undoubtedly this ballad must be regarded as in the main original. An old music-book still preserved in the British Museum, and bearing the date 1530, shows that the Roman Catholics in Britain had preceded Wedderburn in spiritualising the plaintive old ballad “My love morneth for me, my love morneth for me”; and it is an unquestionable fact that a similar practice had obtained among adherents of the old Church, in Germany as well as in Britain, even earlier than the sixteenth century. Nor is evidence wanting that the defendants of the old Church also retaliated on those of the new by satires, which also were adaptations of older popular ballads and set to popular tunes.

The metrical versions of the Psalms contained in the second part of the 'Compendious Book,' which some of our historians have pronounced to be so far superior to the rest of its contents, I must confess appear to me in point of poetic merit less happy than either the hymns or the satirical ballads. No doubt there are stanzas which deserve to live, even in them, particularly in the 23d, 124th, and the 130th; but the majority of them would never, without the hymns and ballads which accompany them, have taken such a hold on the minds of our forefathers. In fact almost the only one which seems to have taken a deep hold on their minds, and the tune and even several of the words of which were retained in Knox's Psalter, is the paraphrase, and (if one might safely settle such a point on internal grounds without an interminable search through the whole of the old German metrical Psalms he would be disposed to add) the, in great measure, original paraphrase, of Psalm lxxxiii.¹ With considerable poetic power and copiousness of imagery, it exhibits a less restrained and chastened mood of spirit than almost any even of the satirical ballads, though one can easily understand how it should have gone to the hearts of men who believed, as firmly as they believed their own existence, that the cause for which they dared and suffered so much was the cause of God and truth, and that opponents strove to crush the cause, as well as those who, maugre all threats of imprisonment, exile, and martyrdom, continued resolutely to uphold it.

The hymns in the first part of the 'Compendious Book' are mostly, as already stated, translations, but translations of many of the finest hymns which the Reformation gave to the Church of Christ, whose winning lifelike exhibition of its principles largely prepared the way for the acceptance of them, even where Luther's name was hated, till opponents sadly confessed that the whole country was singing itself into the Lutheran heresy.¹ They are, in the main, translations executed with spirit, freedom, and true poetic taste, into the purest Scottish dialect of the time, and they had the highest testimony borne to their genuine worth by the fact that, without any formal ecclesiastical sanction, they found their way to the homes and to the hearts of the Scottish people, and continued to be committed to memory, circulated, and sung long after the circumstances which originally called them forth had passed away; while the more homely translations of several of these hymns into Northern English, by good Bishop Coverdale, appear to have had a very limited circulation and influence among the English people.

The doctrinal teaching which pervades these translations from the German is on the whole wonderfully like to that which, from the first, has prevailed in the Reformed Church of Scotland. The only way of salvation for the guilty, which it was the glory of the Reformation once more to bring into its merited prominence, is set forth with singular clearness and earnestness, and is returned to, in almost every hymn, with a persistence which nothing but the author's hearty and loving acceptance of it can explain. Still on some minor points there are such differences as tend to show that the author had studied in the school of Wittemberg rather than in that of Geneva ; in other words, that his poems belong theologically to the earlier era of the Reformation. Dr Bonar in his 'Catechisms of the Reformation' is perhaps right in supposing that there is nothing very distinctively or narrowly Lutheran in the hymns concerning Baptism and the Lord's Supper, though they are unquestionably free translations of Luther's hymns on the same subject. But the Commandments, as already stated, are given in the Lutheran or Roman Catholic form ; and in the long paraphrase of Psalm li., some verses of which were sung by Wishart on the night of his apprehension, there occur expressions in regard to the general effects of baptism stronger than many Scottish Protestants would now use :—

“ Thow wusche me Lord quhen I was borne,
 From all my wickitnes ;
 Bot zit I did, throw sin, forlorne
 Of heuin the rychteousnes.
 Wesche me againe, and from thy horne
 Deliuier me in stres :
 To thy mercy with thé will I go.”

(f) Doctrinal teaching of Book.

“ Bot zit the Lord omnipotent,
 My cairfull case did cure ;
 At Font quhen I was impotent,
 Fragile, vaine, vylde, and pure.
 Than helpit me that King Potent,
 In my misaventure.
 To thy mercy with thé will I go.”

Then a more distinct place of special honour is assigned to our Lord's mother than is now usual among Scottish Protestants, as where it is said in one of the finest of the ballads, after celebrating the praises of her divine Son, our only Lord and Saviour :—

“ Nixt him to lufe his Mother fair,
 With steidfast hart, for euer mair,
 Scho bure the byrth, fréd vs from cair.”

The same place, however, is assigned to her in an address which Calvin, as late as the year 1533, wrote for Nicholas Cop,¹ who was Rector of the University of Paris for that year ; but notwithstanding this, the address was so little to the mind of the auditors that both Calvin and Cop had to escape from Paris, and soon after from France. In another of the ballads the local descent of the Saviour's soul into hell, between His death and resurrection, is affirmed, and the doctrine that He then rescued a number of the spirits in prison, and at His ascension carried them in triumph with Him to heaven, is connected with a traditionary statement of their number apparently, but erroneously, based on Psalm lxviii. 17, which interpretation of that verse I do not remember to have met with elsewhere :—

“ Sanct Johne did tell, thow heryit hell,
 And schew mercie.
 Ane thousand scoir thow did restoir
 To thy glorie.”

One or two slips as to Biblical facts are apparently made by the author, as when in the paraphrase of Psalm li. he speaks of Isaac as Abraham's eldest son; but the substitution of Mount Sinay for Mount Sion is a typographical error or corruption found only in the 1621 edition of the book. In the edition now reprinted the lines are :—

“ For God hes set a Captaine stark and wycht, Christis¹ awin Sone, God and man naturall,
 On Mont Syon, to reule it Just and rycht.”

I have previously said that a number of the hymns, and even some of the psalms, though confessedly translations, are translations executed with considerable spirit, freedom, and poetic taste. A number of them contain figures and similes which are evidently the translator's own, and some of those which may be regarded as suggested by the original are treated in such a way as to show that the author was not a mere versifier like Coverdale, but a genuine poet, whose words were fitted to touch the hearts of his countrymen, to rouse them to deeds of daring, and sustain them even under hardship and severest persecution. This cannot be better exemplified than by subjoining the translations which both he and Coverdale have given of Psalm cxxiv. :—

¹ Sic for Christ [h]is, as in edition 1621.

WEDDERBURN.

Except the Lord with us had stand,
 Say furth Israell unfeinzeitlie,
 Had not the Lord bene our warrand,
 Quhen men rais in our contrarie,
 They had us all on live devorit,
 With Ire sa sharplie thay us schorit,
 Sa kendlit was thair crueltie.

For lyke the welterand wallis brym,¹
 They had ouerquhelmit us with mycht,
 Lyke burnis that in spait fast rin,
 They had ouerthrawin us with slycht.
 The bulrand stremis of thair pryde
 Had peirsit us throw bak and syde,
 And reft fra us our lyfe full rycht.

But loving to the Lord, allone,
 That gaif us nocht to be their pray,
 To be rent with thair teith anone,
 Bot hes us fréd full well thame fray,
 Lyke to ane bird taine in ane net,
 The quhilk the foular for her set
 Sa is our lyfe weill win away.

The net is brokin in peces small,
 And we are savit fra thair schame,
 Our hope was ay, and ever sall
 Be in the Lord, and in His name,
 The quhilk hes creat hevin sa hie,
 And maid the cird sa mervellouslie,
 And all the ferleis of the same.

How much more pithily and forcibly the Scottish poet can express himself may be seen by the versions which both he and Coverdale have given of Psalm cxxxvii., and especially of its last verse:—

WEDDERBURN.

And blissit is that Campione
 Sall serue thé, as thow seruit vs.
 And he that sall thy biarnis² plaig,
 And rasche thair harnis aganis a craig,
 Is happy and full glorious.

COVERDALE.

Except the Lord had been with us,
 Now may Israel say boldly ;
 Except the Lorde had been with us,
 When men rose up against us fiercely ;
 They had devoured us quyck doubtlesse,
 And had overwounce us comfortlesse
 They were so wroth at us truly.

The waves of waters had wrapped us in ;
 Our soul had gone under the floode.
 The deep waters of these proud men Had ronne our soules over, where they stoode.

The Lord be prayed every houre,
 That wold not suffer them us to devoure,
 Nor in their teeth to sucke our bloode.

Our soule is delyvered from their power,
 They cannot have that they have sought,

As the byrde from the snare of the fouler,
 So are we from their dangers brought.
 The snare is broken and we are free ;
 Our helpe is in the Lorde's name truly,
 Which hath made heavin and earth of nought.

COVERDALE.

Truly blessed shall be that man,
 Which, even as thou hast deserved,
 Shall reward thé with soch kyndnesse,
 As thou hast showed to us gyltlesse,
 Which never had offended thé ;
 Blessed shall he be that for the nones Shall throwe thy chyldren agaynst the stones.

² Sic for bairnis.

The word in this verse which is generally rendered "stones" in English versions of the sixteenth and seventeenth century, might be more literally rendered, as in the German and Vulgate and the recent Revised English version,¹ "stone" or "rock," for which Wedderburn, it will be observed in this passage, employs the Scotch word "craig." The same word is employed by him as the equivalent of the same original term in Psalm cxiv., where verses 6, 7, and 8 are thus rendered:—

"Quhat gart zow montanis lyke rammis stert & stend?
 And ze hillis lyke lambis loup and bend?
 It was the Lordis feir that maid sic reird,
 And Jacobis God perturbit all the eird.
 For God turnit the craig in fresche reueir,
 The barrane bra in fontane watter cleir."

This, and the version given just before of Psalm cxxiv., seem to show that the poet had been no inattentive observer of the scenery of the Highland districts of his native county, with their bare braes and craigs, their mountain burns and rocky streams, often "bulrand" and hurrying on with sudden "spaits," and occasionally dashing wildly over a linn, to which last he clearly alludes in his translation of Psalm lxxix., though there is no corresponding allusion in the German version, which in the main he follows:—

"And as watter, [that] fast rinnis ouer ane lin,
 Dois not returne againe to the awin place.
 Sa thow, gude Lord, put our sin from thy face."

One other simile must not be omitted in this place. It is a peculiarly Scottish one, that of putting to the horn or declaring rebels those who fled from justice, and was often put in practice against the early Reformers, who

¹ Blessed is he who taketh and dasheth thy little ones "against the rock."
Delitzsch on the Psalm.

when summoned fled from trial, and in consequence were put out of the protection of the law and liable to be slain with impunity.¹ It is referred to in one of the verses quoted from the translation of Psalm li., and again in the following lines from one of the hymns on the birth of Christ :—

“ For ye war all at Goddis horn,
 This Babe, to yow that now is borne,
 Sall mak yow saif and for yow die,
 And yow restoir to libertie.”

I cannot refrain from giving one more illustration of the forcible and pithy manner in which this old Scottish poet has translated a passage which has not generally been so happily rendered by subsequent versifiers of the Psalms. It is from Psalm cxv., which, however, the ‘ Compendious Book,’ following in this respect the Vulgate, makes a part of the preceding psalm instead of a separate composition :—

“ Our God forsuth Ringis in heuin full hie,
 And quhat him listis or lykis, workis he.
 Thir Imagis of stock, stane, gilt with gold,
 Ar maid be men, and syne for money sold :
 Thay haif a mouth can nouter say nor sing,
 Thair eine ar blind, and thay can sé nathing,
 Thay can not heir, thocht men do cry and zell,
 Thair nois thirlis can nouter sauer nor smell ;
 Thay haif handis can nouter feill nor grope,
 Thair fundyit feit can nouter gang nor loupe ;
 Thay can pronunce na voce furth of thair throitis,
 Thay ar ouergane with mouswobis and moitis.”

¹ Hence the attempt on Wishart's life in Dundee, and also the reason why he and even Knox for a time in their journeys through the country were accompanied by followers who might defend them, if attacked, as Wishart had been on that occasion. That was the strongest practical proof these followers could give that they were determined to make common cause with their spiritual guides, if any similar attempt was made on their lives.

Exception has been taken in former times, and still more in our own, to the tone and contents of the ballads in the 'Compendious Book,' and a sort of mingled contempt and pity has been expressed for those who could find pleasure in them or encourage the repeated publication of them. The writers who have given expression to such opinions forget that a similar adaptation of the tunes, and even to some extent of the words, of secular songs was made by the old Church in the two previous centuries,¹ as well as by the new in the sixteenth; and that even in a much later age John Wesley, of whose deep piety and genuine poetic taste no question can be raised, seemed to vindicate the lawfulness of the practice, and even complain that so much of the best music we had should be given up to the service of the devil. In still more recent times

(h) Objections taken to it.

¹ "In the fourteenth century appeared the device which played so large a part in the production of the Reformation hymns—that of adapting secular tunes to sacred poems, and also making religious paraphrases of secular ditties. Praises of love, of outdoor sport, even of wine, by a few simple alterations were made to express devotional sentiments. A good illustration of this practice is the recasting of the favourite folk-song 'Den liebsten Bulen den ich han' into 'Den liebsten Herren den ich han.' Much more common, however, was the transfer of melodies from profane poems to sacred. The associations of these tunes were not always of the most edifying kind, and some of them were so identified with unsanctified ideas that the strictest theologians protested against them, and some were weeded out. In course of time the old secular associations were forgotten, and few devout Germans are now reminded that some of the grand melodies in which faith and hope find such appropriate utterance are variations of old love songs and drinking songs."—Professor Dickinson in 'North American Review,' October 1895. In the preface to the reprint of the 'Niederländische Geistliche Lieder des XV Jahrhunderts,' the author states that many of them attained an extensive circulation among the common people and were in the truest sense people's songs, either being composed on the same model as their secular songs, or being adaptations to religious uses. They belonged, however, he adds, only to the sphere of household devotion, expressing the longing of the pious soul for union with its heavenly Bridegroom, or celebrating the birth of our Lord, or the praises of his virgin-mother and of the saints. For further statements on this subject see Appendix No. III.

S. H. V. 11.

Bishop Heber did not disdain to set some of his hymns to secular tunes. His beautiful Epiphany hymn, "Brightest and best of the sons of the morning," his latest biographer has just told us, was composed to the tune of the Scottish song "Here awa', there awa', wanderin' Willie," picked up by him during his visit to Sir Walter Scott. I myself remember to have heard one of the most solemn of our paraphrases sung in a church, in a not unlearned city, to the tune "Ye banks and braes o' bonnie Doon." Towards the end of last century, among the handloom weavers in the villages of the Mearns and Forfarshire who came under the influence of the "Berean" revival, there was no more favourite hymn than the one with the refrain—

" He's up high in the sky That's waitin' on me," a spiritualising of the well-known ballad—

" Low doun among the broom,
He's waitin' on me."

It is a well-known fact that the tunes of many of the finest German hymns, in so far as they were not founded on those of the old Latin hymns, were taken from secular songs, the very names of several of which would but for this have been now forgotten. Not unfrequently with the melody the words were also partially appropriated, and, notwithstanding all that has been said in condemnation of this practice of turning to a better use fine secular tunes, it may be doubted whether, from the countenance it has received from hymn-writers of acknowledged eminence in various ages, any other criterion can yet be laid down on the subject than that such appropriations are not to be made rashly nor indiscriminately, nor further than the general feeling of the age and the country is prepared to acquiesce in them. But whatever may be thought of this practice, it will not at least be denied that it was far more venial and indicative of a higher, more earnest, and correct taste than the practice which was occasionally followed in the times preceding the Reformation of adapting the tunes of several of the Church hymns to secular, sometimes to very profane songs, and singing these at certain frolicsome seasons under the leadership of an Abbot of Unreason even in the house of God, as well as in their households and at social merry-makings. To those who take exception to the occasional coarseness of the ballads, it may perhaps be sufficient to reply that no one ought to blame them too severely in these respects who does not know something of the polluting character of those they were intended to supersede, and which they did to a large extent succeed in superseding; and no one who does know those others will fail to own that a great moral triumph was secured when they were superseded by others so much more free from what was debasing. The passage even from those of them which are not the production of Wedderburn but a somewhat later addition to his book is almost as from darkness to light, from filth and ribaldry to comparative modesty and refinement, just as are many of Burns's modifications of old Scottish songs. In fact one has only cursorily to compare them with the poems of Dunbar, the plays of Sir David Lyndsay acted before the noble lords and ladies of the Court of Scotland, or with the ballads of Robert Sempill, to discover how much in advance, in that era, were the earnest men who had lived in the atmosphere of Wittenberg in point of true refinement and purity. True, there are stanzas in them, just as there are paragraphs in Knox's History, which betray the coarseness of the olden time, and they do speak of the old Church and its ministers in a style very different from that which would now be used; but we speak in cool blood, and have to do with men of far higher culture and morality, while the authors of these ballads wrote them in the very crisis of a life-and-death struggle between truth and error, between purity and gross debauchery,¹ which surely though slowly was paving the way for the overthrow of the old Church. They wrote them to support and cheer those who were contending, even unto bonds, imprisonment, and death, for the simplicity and purity which the Christian religion imperatively demands of its professors, and especially of its ministers. If their rude songs and homely, earnest, if biting² words commended themselves to the hearts of such men, and encouraged them to continue the lengthened and often disheartening

¹ We do not need to call in Knox, or Lindsay, or the satirists in evidence of this humbling fact. The testimony of their own Councils, of the Acts of Parliament, and of some of their best men, as Principal Hay in his congratulatory address to Cardinal Betoun, and Ninian Winzet in the sad appeals and confessions inserted in his 'Tractates,' as well as that of impartial modern historians like Tytler and Dr Joseph Robertson, is more than sufficient to establish it beyond contradiction. The testimony of Conæus, who died when about to be raised to the purple, covers almost all that Alesius and Knox have averred: "In multorum sacerdotum ædibus scortum publicum . . . nec a sacrilego quorundam luxu tutus erat matronarum honos aut virginalis pudor." More notable still is the representation given in the "Memoire" addressed to the Pope by Queen Mary and the Dauphin, evidently at the instance of Mary of Guise, in which the spread of heresy is expressly attributed to the ignorance and immorality of the clergy. See Appendix B., vol. ii., of Mr Hume Brown's recent biography of Knox. But it must never be forgotten there were still among the inferior clergy many earnest and upright men, who longed for the reformation of such scandals, and that it was from this class that not a few of the martyrs and confessors between 1528 and 1558 sprung, and that not a few of the lesser barons were hardly less earnest and steadfast in the cause.

² It may be said of their satires, as of the French, "celles-ci trop acérées"; but cruel oppression may embitter even the meek and quiet in the land.

warfare with ignorance and immorality, till their cause was crowned with victory, their authors did a signal service to their country, which deserves to be gratefully remembered and ungrudgingly acknowledged.¹ Many of their compositions are as truly confessors' and martyrs' utterances as any of those of the Covenanters in the succeeding century. A short specimen or two of their authors' yearning tenderness towards their deluded fellow-countrymen, and of their earnest efforts, even for the reformation of those priests whom they felt it so incumbent on them to denounce, may not be out of place in this connection. The first I give is from one of the ballads which seems to be an imitation of a Swiss or French Huguenot song,² which was also imitated in German and Swedish:—

“ Preistis, Christ beleue,
 And onlie traist in to his blude,
 And nocht in to zour warkis gude,
 As plainlie Paule can preue.

Preistis, leirne to preiche,
 And put away zour Ignorance,
 Pryse onlie God, his word auance,
 And Christis peple teiche.

Preistis, sober be,
 And fecht not, nouthor boist, nor schoir,
 Misreule the realm and court no moir,
 And to zour Kirkis flé.

¹ We cannot make these songs our own, as they then did. “But they are stern and imposing monuments, more durable than brass, and upon them, if we have eyes to see, are carved memorials of great souls and a great age.”

² It first appeared in the ‘Chansons Nouvelles’ printed by Pierre de Vingle about 1533, and has been reprinted in the ‘Chansonnier Huguenot,’ Paris, 1871. See notes to the above “ballate” in the notes appended to this reprint.

Preistis, mend zour lyfe,
 And leif zour foule Sensualitie,
 And vylde stinkand chaistitie,
 And ilk ane wed ane wyfe.”

The other specimen I give is in the main a translation of a German hymn, but it is a translation which breathes to the full as kindly and compassionate a spirit towards the adherents of the old Church as the original, and certainly a more kindly one than the English translation. The Scottish poet has been even more successful with the double rhyme in the alternate lines than the author of the original :—

“O Herre Gott, dein göttlich wort,
 Ist lang verdunkelt blieben,
 Bis durch dein gnad uns ist gesagt,
 Was Paulus hat geschrieben.”

SCOTTISH VERSION.

Its relation to Bp. Coverdale's Book.

The English version of the above hymn was composed by good Bishop Coverdale, and is contained in his “Goostly Psalmes and Spirituall Songes,”¹ reprinted

¹ ‘Goostly Psalmes and Spirituall Songes drawn out of the holy Scripture, for the conforte and consolacyon of such as love to joyce in God and his among his other works by the Parker Society, and edited by Dr Pearson. This treatise bears in gremio even less acknowledgment than the Scottish 'Compendious Book' of its being a translation, though it is more exclusively so; and though, in the biographical notice of the author prefixed to the volume, the editor has inserted a list of Coverdale's works, given by his contemporary Bishop Bale, from which it appears that he translated 'Cantiones Wittenbergensium,' lib. i.; yet, in the note which is prefixed to this particular treatise, he gives no hint that these psalms and songs were translations from the German—were, in fact, the Cantiones referred to by Bale. Such, however, is the undoubted fact with respect to them, and the arrangement and contents of the treatise correspond to a considerable extent with the Wittemberg hymn-books, or with those of the Upper Palatinate (where, at Bergzabern, Coverdale, during the years of his second exile, was minister or schoolmaster); while the Scottish translation corresponds more nearly with the German hymn-books issued at Magdeburg or Strassburg. Still the two treatises have a number of hymns in common, the comparison of which affords a satisfactory means of determining the words.' Then, after quotation of Psalm cxlvii. 1, Colos. iii. 16, James v. 13, come the following lines:—

TO THE BOKE.

"Go lytle boke, get thé acquaintance
Among the lovers of God's worde,
Geve them occasyon the same to auance,
And to make theyr songes of the Lorde,
That they may thrust under the borde
All other ballettes of fylthyne,
And that we all with one accorde
May geve ensample of godlyne.

"Go lytle boke amonge mens chyl dren,
And get thé to theyr companye,
Teach them to syng the commaundementes
ten,
And other ballettes of God's glorie.
Be not ashamed, I warande thé.
Though thou be rude in worde and ryme,
Thou shalt to youth some occasyon be,
In godly sportes to passe theyr tyme."

merits of the respective translations, and of explaining why the one book should have come to exercise a great influence in forwarding the Reformation, and the other should have had very little; why the one should have been often reprinted, and the other never until our own day. But what is still more remarkable is that four hymns, exactly or almost exactly alike, save so far as the English and Scottish dialects differ, make their appearance in both collections; and it is a matter of much difficulty to determine whether one of the translators had borrowed these from the other or both had got them from a common source, now unknown. In favour of the claim of Coverdale to be the original translator are the averments that he was the older man, and that his treatise had been published by the year 1539, and that there is no reason to suppose that the Scottish collection in its most rudimentary form was published so early. In favour of the opinion that the Scottish version is the original are the averments that these four hymns are superior to most of the others translated by Coverdale, and that the Scottish poet is admitted to have been the better poet, in fact the only poet of the two, for Coverdale hardly ever rises above the level of the mere versifier. Some may be disposed to add the further averment, that several of the minor changes made on these hymns seem to be more easily accounted for on the supposition that the Scottish was the earlier, while others aver exactly the opposite. But however that may be, there can be no question that the one must have borrowed from the other, or both have borrowed from a common pre-existing translation. Even if Coverdale's collection had been published by the year 1539, it is just possible that he had been brought into contact with Wedderburn's intimate friends Alesius and Macchabæus before that date. Alesius, like Coverdale, was a protégé of Cromwell, at that time Henry VIII.'s Vicar-General, and was employed by him in forwarding the cause of the Reformation in England. Macchabæus was for some years after his flight from Scotland settled in the south of England, having been promoted by Bishop Shaxton to a canonry in the Cathedral of Salisbury and to the rectory of Bishopstowe, and under the patronage of Cromwell was helping forward the cause of the Reformation in that neighbourhood so far as Henry at that time countenanced it. Coverdale for a time was similarly employed in a neighbouring county, and then, or shortly after, became brother-in-law to Macchabæus. Even, therefore, if there were foundation for the averment that the first edition of Coverdale's hymns was published by 1539, and that these four hymns were contained in it, it is not beyond the range of possibility that he may have got them through one of these Scotsmen,¹ and that their thoughts or John Wedderburn's, as well as those of his elder brother, may have been turned towards the work of translation before their exile in 1539-40. Coverdale's 'Psalms and Spiritual Songs' are admitted to bear no date, and contain a translation of at least one hymn² which is not known to have appeared in High German hymn-books till the years 1539-40. Dr Cotton's only warrant for asserting that the book had been published before 1539 was that it was found included in a list of prohibited books given under that year in the first edition of Foxe's 'Acts and Monuments.' This list, however, was not inserted in the second and several subsequent editions of Foxe's book, and the scholarly and accurate editor who in our own time has done so much to correct its mistakes, states explicitly that the list of prohibited books in question was not issued till 1546, and that this can still be ascertained from Bishop Bonner's register, which, under that year, contains both the Act of Prohibition and the list of prohibited books.¹ Long before that date Coverdale, like his Scottish brother-in-law, had had to betake himself to Germany, and could hardly have failed to meet with the other Scottish exiles, Alesius, Fyffe, and Wedderburn, who were then there. Mr Laing admits that these facts are as I have given them, and that Dr Cotton and the recent editor of Coverdale seem to have made a mistake in asserting, merely on the strength of the above list, that his hymns were published by 1539. He is inclined, however, to agree with them in opinion that the hymns were published by 1539 or 1540. This he does on the grounds, that in 1540 he had to escape from ('Bibliographie,' 1855, p. 780), and the latter part contains additional hymns, and among others this one, and also its melody, for the first time. In this later work of 1870 (vol. iii. pp. 565, 566) he gives, for the first time, the earlier Low-German text, which had come to light some years before by the reprinting of a Hymn-book of 1526 (?), and the Riga and Rostock Hymn-books of 1531. There is not the slightest reason to suppose that these Low-German Hymn-books had any circulation in the Upper Palatinate where, in much penury, Coverdale spent the greater part of his years of exile, nor that such a variety of hymn-books were accessible to him as may now easily be gathered together. Besides, it is expressly stated by his contemporary, Bale, that it was the 'Cantiones Wittenbergensium,' and by another 'Cantiones usuales Wittenbergensium,' which he translated and published.

² This is the hymn, "Allein Gott in der höh' sei Ehr," ascribed to Decius or Hovesch. The latter year was that named by Wackernagel in his 'Deutsches Kirchenlied' of 1841, but in his 'Deutsches Kirchenlied' of 1870, vol. iii. p. 567, he intimates that it had since been found in a Leipzig Hymn-book of 1539. The first part of this Hymn-book is derived from a Wittemberg one of 1535

England and pass eight years in exile, and that Gough, who published the book, is not known to have published any works after the year 1543. To this it may be replied, first, that this last only necessitates the publication of the book in 1543; and that the supposition even of that date would still allow ample time for intercourse between him and his brother-in-law and Alesius and Wedderburn, the other Scottish exiles at Wittemberg. For even when, shortly afterwards, he published his account of the services of the Reformed Danish Church, Coverdale makes no reference to his hymns; though, had they been published at that time, we might have expected him to make some such reference to his first hymn to the Holy Spirit and his metrical versions of the Lord's Prayer, when mentioning the congregation's singing the Veni Sancte Spiritus,¹ or a similar hymn in their mother tongue, before the sermon, and of the Paternoster or a translation of it at an earlier stage of the service, just as he makes reference to the Confession of sin he had humbly offered to the King's most honourable Council in 1539, as being "such or like words" with that which the Danish priest exhorted his congregation to make.² What further I have to say in regard to

"Veni, Sancte Spiritus, et emitte cœlitus Lucis tuæ radium,"

with the still more famous one—

"Veni, Creator Spiritus, mentes tuorum visita, Imple superna gratiâ quæ tu creasti pectora."

² "First, for the most part they sing the Paternoster in their mother tongue, and then the Psalms, sometimes more, sometimes fewer. . . . And to the intent that their hearts may be opened to the true understanding of the gospel which he is about to preach unto them, he exhorteth them to call for help to the Holy Ghost. Then they sing with one voice unto the Holy Ghost this song, Veni Sancte Spiritus, &c., or such another like it, in their mother tongue." At the close of the sermon "he requireth them to confess and acknowledge their

The ballad
"Say-weill and Doweill."

In my lecture on the Wedderburns in 1867, I adduced in proof of the high qualities of their 'Work' another of the poems, which I may entitle "Say weill and do weill," and I said that if there were no other in the book (and there were many others in it evincing earnest moral purpose, genuine attachment to Christ and His teaching, and firm resolve to venture all in the maintenance and profession of it), that one would have gone far to secure its recognition in those or any days. Dean Stanley in 1872 said of it, that "it expresses with singular felicity and clear discrimination the true proportion between profession and practice, between doctrine and character, between good words and good works."¹

I had found no reason in 1867 to doubt either that it was the work of John Wedderburn, or that it was an original composition, and not, like so many of the others, a translation or adaptation of a poem made by another; and I expressed a fond hope that it would not be found hereafter to be so. Some years after, however, when examining the volumes published by the Percy Society, I came in vol. xiii. on some ballads, conjectured to have been composed by Bishop Cox² of Ely and never before to have been published. They are contained in a manuscript pre-sins unto God with him, every man in his own conscience, and to say such or like words in his heart as I have plurally expressed in the general confession, that I humbly offered to the King's most honourable Council for the edifying anno 1539."—Fruitful Lessons, &c., pp. 471, 472.

² Cox had been tutor to Edward VI., next Dean of Westminster, and afterwards Bishop of Ely. From 1555 to 1558 he was in Frankfort with the English and Scottish exiles, and translated Luther's metrical version of the Lord's Prayer, which, though he had dealt harshly with Knox at Frankfort, appeared in the Psalters long used in Scotland, as well as in England.

sented to Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, by his son, as "conteyninge some fragmentes of that excellent man." The editor, however, says "that it is doubtful whether all the contents of the manuscript can rightly be attributed to Dr Richard Cox as the genuine author, notwithstanding the note on its first page appended by his son Roger Cox ; for we find in it two other specimens of English verse, which are certainly not his, being inserted among the published poems of Sir Thomas Wyatt." The editor further says that "the ballads are without any signature whatever," while even the signature C. is attached to one of those he has traced to Wyatt. Of course it would have been an almost unprecedented occurrence that, if the poem were not really of Scottish origin, it should have been published and circulated in Scotland for nearly three centuries before it was published in England from the manuscript of its author. Still I confess it rather staggered me when I found that the poem had prefixed to it the refrain—

"Say-well and do-well, they are things twayne ; Thyryse happy is he in whom bothe raygne," which is wanting in the 'Gude and Godlie Ballates.' I remembered, however, that there was also a copy of it in the Bannatyne MS., and when I had an opportunity of consulting it, I found that it had the refrain, though not prefixed but only appended—

"Say weill and do weill ar thingis twane ; Thyryss happy is he, quhom in thay do remane."

There are considerable variations between the English and Scottish texts, and smaller variations between the two Scottish texts. Both of these contain one verse more than is found in the English text. This last is evidently the more corrupt, or the more carelessly copied in the Cox MS., having in the first stanza "noth furth spryng," instead of "doth furth spryng," in the fourth "ioly there make" instead of "ioly chere make," and probably also in the eighth "hundred store" instead of "hundred score." But on the other hand it has preserved two readings preferable to those found in the 'Compendious Book,' and in both is at one with the Bannatyne copy—viz., in stanza sixth, where it reads "say well hath frends but here and there," and in stanza eighth, where it reads "with *mony*e is quite downcast," and the Bannatyne reads "with money is doun quyte kast"; whereas in the one case the text in this book in its several editions is "baith heir and thair," and in the other "with mony," i.e. many—money having uniformly the spelling it has at the present day, as on pp. 186, 194.

I do not venture to determine whether the poem was originally composed in the English or the Scottish dialect, both because I am now more fully satisfied than in 1867 that the third or last part of the 'Compendious Book' is decidedly of a miscellaneous character, and that a number of the satirical ballads are by other authors than the Wedderburns, and in all probability had been circulated as broadsheets before they were added to the 'Book.' Possibly "Say weill and do weill" is of earlier origin than the sixteenth century, and may have come from some one acquainted with Langland's 'Piers Ploughman's Vision,' in which both characters are introduced, though not so prominently as the three Do well, Do bet, and Do best.

Another of the so-called Cox ballads is more certainly of Scottish origin, for its refrain is—

"Hold backe thy tonge at meat and meale ; Speake but few wordes, bestow them weill," where the Scotch "weill" is unquestionably required by the rhyme; but that word not being current in England, a compromise is made, and the refrain at the end of the ballad is changed to—

"Hold backe thy tonge at meat and meale,
So shalt thou lye and doo ryght weule."

The last piece in the volume, "Welcum, Fortoun," was proscribed by the General Assembly in 1568,¹ and in consequence had so completely disappeared that Mr Laing through a long life had searched for it in vain, till in the spring of 1868 I took over the old copy here reprinted to Edinburgh, and showed it to him and Mr Hill Burton at the Messrs Blackwood's. Some will have it that the ballad is one of true and honourable love, as Dr M'Crie² of Ayr, and a well-known lecturer on Scottish Psalmody and Sacred Music bearing the initials C. R. R.³ Others, like Mr Maxwell, who hold that it is the composition of Robert Wedderburn, vicar of Dundee, suppose it to be his profession of undying attachment to the mother of his two sons, whom, as a priest, he might cherish but could not wed;⁴ while still others suppose that the ballad, even as we have it here, is a purified form of an older and grosser one, just as in later times much of the filth of older ballads

has been expurgated in the shape in which we now have them in Burns and some other poets. If it is the production of R. Wedderburn, it is difficult to avoid associating it with the ballad No. cclxxxix. in the Bannatyne MS. attributed to a Wedderburn and bearing the title "My Lufe was fals and ful of flattry," which would seem to show that, however warm and constant was his attachment to her, she proved fickle and insincere to him. One almost regrets to have disinterred it from its long entombment, as it rather mars his enjoyment of one of the finest hymns in the volume to know such was the original from which it sprung:—

"Welcum, Lord Christ, welcum, againe,
My ioy, my confort, and my blis,
That culd me saif from Hellis paine,
Bot onlie thow nane was, nor is.

"Was neuer nane to me mair kynde
Nor Christ; thairfor I will him pryse,
Onlie with saule, body and mynde,
My hope and traist haill in him lies."

We cannot now "make these songs our own," not only for the reason suggested in note 1, p. lxxv, but also for the reason that the Scottish vernacular has long ceased to be used as the medium of religious instruction. We still cherish it as the medium of our most valued secular poetry. We not only tolerate it but cling to it as the medium of our most popular novels and tales, but its use in public religious services and teaching has long been obsolete. Our great Reformer may be said to have led the way in this, necessitated thereto by his long exile from his native land, and long use of the Southern forms of speech, both while employed in forwarding the cause of the Reformation in England, during the reign of Edward VI., and also while ministering to congregations of English exiles abroad, after the death of the good King Edward. The failure of the old Church to provide a Scottish version of the Scriptures,¹ and the almost entire dependence of the Protestants, during their prolonged struggle for recognition, on the translations of Tyndale and Coverdale, their subsequent adoption of the Genevan version, the Book of Common Order, and the metrical Psalter partly prepared by the exiles there, and then of King James's version, Rous's metrical Psalter, and the Westminster Catechisms, largely fostered it; the Union first of the crowns and then of the kingdoms virtually completed it, and it is now vain to hope for the resuscitation of the old Scottish dialect in the services of the sanctuary. Whether for good or ill, there can now in the religious sphere be nulla vestigia retrorsum. And there could hardly be a more conclusive proof of the strong hold which the new teaching acquired and maintained on the Scottish people than is afforded by the fact of their gradually abandoning their own much-loved vernacular in this highest sphere, and accepting a Bible and several other religious formularies in the dialect of their southern co-religionists, and making it more and more the vehicle of religious instruction both in church and schools.

In concluding this long Introduction I have only to return my most grateful acknowledgments to the friends who rallied to my help when health so nearly failed me—first, to the Rev. Dr Blair of Leighton Manse, Dun-

BIBLIOGRAPHY OF THE SEVERAL EDITIONS.

The edition of the 'Compendious Buik' believed to have been published in 1567 is the earliest of which a copy is still extant. It is a small 8vo, printed in black letter, containing signatures A to P ii, and having the folios, not the pages, numbered up to 113. The "Tabill" of contents is not numbered. As already stated, it is now in the possession of the representatives of the late Patrick Anderson, Esq., who have most kindly allowed it to be used for this reprint, and to whom the best thanks of the Scottish Text Society are due. It unfortunately wants the title-page and the two succeeding folios,¹ the contents of which have in this reprint been supplied from the edition of 1578. But it has the rest of the text complete, and the "Tabill" of contents following the text, and a single folio printed in the same type as the text, apparently forming the title-page of an old Scottish metrical Psalter, and being the fourth of the half-sheet bearing the signatures P i, P ii. Some are of opinion that it was printed on this last folio simply to fill it up and to serve as an advertisement of a forthcoming Psalter of 1567. Others with greater probability maintain that the Psalter actually followed and was bound up with the 'Compendious Buik' of Godlie and Spirituall Songs, and that after the condemnation of the last of the Songs by the General Assembly of 1568 the two were separated, and that then the title-page forming the fourth folio of the last half-sheet of the former remained attached to it, and that a new title-page was provided for the Psalter. The title still remaining on this folio bears the date of 1567, and purports to be printed at Edinburgh by John Scot. From the Act of the Assembly, however, we can hardly doubt that Bassandyne was regarded by it as really responsible for the offence it condemned; and undoubtedly the printing of the volume is more distinct and much less blurred than that of Archbishop Hamilton's Catechism and the facsimiles of Scot's editions of Sir David Lyndsay's works given in Messrs Dickson and Edmond's 'Annals of Scottish Printing.' Scot's "printing irons and letters" were arrested by the magistrates of Edinburgh in 1562, when he was detected clandestinely printing Ninian Winzet's 'Last Blast of the Trompet,' and appear ultimately to have been made over to Bassandyne, though Messrs Dickson and Edmond seem to doubt if they were ever actually made use of by him in any of the works issued by him and having his name attached.

On the back of this title-page is an entry of some historical interest. Question has been raised in our own day whether the Doxology, or conclusion as it was termed, was sung in the Scottish Church from the Reformation onwards, or was introduced towards the end of the sixteenth century. The Rev. Neil Livingston, in his splendid edition of the Scottish Psalter of 1635 (pp. 4, 36, 37), inclines to the latter opinion. Some in our own day, founding on the testimony of Baillie in the seventeenth century and that of Ninian Winzet in the sixteenth, maintain the former. Perhaps the rubric on the back of the title-page of this early edition of the Psalter gives the true explanation, "And gif ye pleis to singe this Gloria Patri." It was not enjoined but allowed, and may not have been in general use till 1595, when doxologies to suit all metres first appeared in the Scottish Psalm-book.

The edition of 1578, of which only one copy is at present known to be extant, was also a small 8vo in black letter, printed in Edinburgh by John Ros, having signatures A to N and pages 1 to 207, with Kalendar prefixed, the pages of which are not numbered. The outer half of the title-page, two leaves of the Kalendar, and last page of the "Tabill" of contents, are wanting;

but, like the editions of 1600 and 1621, it has five "Ballates" which, as already stated, do not appear in the earlier edition, and are altogether in a different position from augmentations made during the lifetime of the Wedderburns. It has the autograph and book-plate of Baron Iohne Maule, a former owner, and it is now in the possession of Mr Christie Miller of Craigentenny, in whose library at Britwell, Herts, are to be found so many rare books connected with the early literature of Scotland. It was reprinted by Mr David Laing, and I have to thank Mr Miller for his great kindness in allowing it to be brought up to the British Museum that I might have every facility for consulting it.

The edition of 1600, of which only one complete copy is now extant, is also a small 8vo in black letter, printed in Edinburgh by Robert Smith, with signatures from A to O. If leaves or pages were numbered, the numbers have disappeared; but the leaves have been neatly mounted and the text enclosed in red lines and the volume handsomely bound in blue morocco. It formerly belonged to the Duke of Roxburghe and has the Roxburghe arms, and it is now in the British Museum, with the press mark C 39 d. 63. The fragment of a copy of this edition, formerly in the possession of Mr Laing, is now in the University Library at St Andrews. The readings of this edition generally coincide with those of one or other of the previous editions, but it has been much more carelessly printed. The spelling is not nearly so much modernised as that of the next edition. This was printed at Edinburgh by Andro Hart in 1621, and it also is a small 8vo in black letter, apparently unpagged, and, besides the half-sheet containing the title-page and the prose Catechism, has signatures A iiii to N iiii. Two copies of it are still extant; one of which, formerly belonging to the Duke of Roxburghe, having his arms impressed and bound in blue morocco, is now in the Advocates' Library, Edinburgh, and the other, which has the date cut off, is now in the British Museum. The spelling is greatly modernised, and if some of its readings, which differ from those of previous editions, are to be accepted as genuine, others are manifestly erroneous.

APPENDIX I.

THE KINSHIP OF THE WEDDERBURNS OF ANGUS (p. xviii).

THE more I have investigated this problem the more complicated does it seem to me to become, and, notwithstanding all the kind help extended to me by those who have had more full access to manuscript sources than has fallen to my lot, it seems to me next to impossible to fix the exact connection of the three poets with other branches of the family or clan. For early in the sixteenth century there seems almost to have been a clan of Wedderburns in Dundee and its neighbourhood; and I can only trust that those who are working at the problem under more favourable conditions may be able to present something more satisfactory than the negative results which in the main are all I have been able as yet to attain. I shall give first in order the extracts from MS. and printed documents relating to the Wedderburns generally, and then those relating to the three who are regarded as having had the chief hand in preparing the Compendious Book and furnishing to their reforming countrymen their earliest Psalm, Hymn, and Song Book.

I. I insert again, because of its importance, the list of those who in the first half of the sixteenth century¹ matriculated or graduated at the University of St Andrews:—

The entire list, I have no doubt, will appear in the Introduction he is preparing to the volume which he is editing for the Scottish History Society, but with his generous permission I subjoin the entries made between 1514 and 1554:—

in that county some time thereafter. . . . How or when they came to Angus we have no direct evidence; but it appears a branch of them from Eyemouth have settled there¹ much about this time, as being a fit place for all kind of mercantile business. The immediate ancestor of this family was:—

“I. James Wedderburn, who in the reign of King James III. was designed merchant burges of Dundee, as will be shown hereafter. To whom he was married is not come to our knowledge, but he left issue two sons: (1.) David, who is mentioned in a confirmation of a charter under the Great Seal of a donation ‘ad sustentationem capelani in ecclesia de Dundee,’ &c., dated 19th February 1589;² but he died without issue. (2.) James, who became his father’s heir.

“II. James, son of James Wedderburn, merchant burges of Dundee in the reign of King James IV.; married Janet, daughter and heiress of David Forrester of Nevay,³ by whom he had a son,

“III. John [a gentleman of fine accomplishments and much in favour with King James V. (p. 578)], who was town-clerk of Dundee, and got a charter under the Great Seal from King James V., ‘Johanni Wedderburn filio Jacobi Wedderburn, jun., burgen. de Dundé inter ipsum Jacobum et Jonetam Forrester ejus conjugem procreato,’ of the lands of Tofts, &c., in the barony of Tullochhill⁴ in the shire of Forfar, dated 20th June 1527. He got another charter confirming to

³ Sic for “in Neva.”

⁴ Should be “lands of Trosto and part of Tullochill in the barony of Ferne and county of Forfar.” The charter was really signed on 17th and confirmed on 20th January 1527-28 (Register of Great Seal, 1513-1546, No. 539). From No. 1286 in the same volume of the Register, we find that in 1533 John and his mother made over their respective rights of the fee and the liferent of these lands to the tutor on the neighbouring estate of Balnamoon. But as no mention is made of the father, as in the previous charter, we may conclude that the son was then of full age, and as Douglas says that his son John died soon after 1533, we seem to be precluded from identifying him and his son with that James who lived on at Dieppe till 1550-51, and his son John, who returned to Dundee, and was served heir to him in 1553. Douglas’s statements are not always to be implicitly accepted, as Mr Laing had already pointed out (‘Gude and Godlie Ballates,’ pp. xiii, xiv), and one may still with him confess his inability “to assign the exact relationship that may have existed between” the numerous members of the family, “or to account for various important discrepancies in the notices we have in regard to their history.” Generally as the statement that John Wedderburn and a supposed son of his were Town Clerks of Dundee was for long accepted, it has been recently shown to be inaccurate, and it has even been questioned, not without reason, whether the David married to Helen Lawson was really his son.

him some acres of land lying in the lordship of Dudhope, &c., dated 31st August 1533. HE DIED SOON AFTER, and left issue a son, “IV. David Wedderburn, also town-clerk of Dundee, who got a charter under the Great Seal to him and Helen Lawson, his spouse, of the lands of Hiltoun of Craigie in the shire of Forfar, dated 9th October 1535.¹ . . . He lived to a great age, died about the year 1590, and left issue two sons: (1.) Alexander, his heir; (2.) James, who was bred to the Church,” and was successively Professor of Divinity at St Andrews and Bishop of Dunblane.

If these data were to be accepted, then it would be impossible to identify the second James of Douglas with James the poet, for that James is stated to have had a grandson who was married by 1535, and therefore, we would suppose, born not later than 1514, and a son John, father of this David, who must have been born not later than 1493. In fact, that James could not be identified with the one who entered college in 1507, much less with the oldest of the poet brothers, who entered in 1514. Nor could his son John be identified with John the poet, but only with the John who entered college twenty years before him. I take it that it was he and not John the poet who was, as Douglas says, p. 578, the hero of the archery contest, and was so probably also of the “respite” referred to on p. lxxxviii, for by April 1529 the latter was both “Magister” and “clericus.”²

IV. I next subjoin the various references to Wedderburns in the published Register of the Great Seal and the printed Acts of the Parliament of Scotland which I have myself verified; also extracts from the MS. Register of the Privy Seal, and other MS. Records, kindly copied for me by the Rev. Walter Macleod:—

² If not in priest’s orders then, he could not after the “slaughter” have been promoted without a papal dispensation; and even if in priest’s orders then, he could not, after it, have continued to act as priest without such a dispensation. For the same reason, as well as for the further reason, that all evidence goes to show that he was then absent from Scotland, I take it that it was to one of the non-graduate and non-clerical Roberts referred to in the contemporary Dundee Protocol books, and not to the “Magister” Robertus of 1536, that the respites of 1537-38 and 1543 mentioned on pp. lxxxviii, lxxxix were granted.

Also 1162, from which it appears he had been married to Janet Forrester, and had died before the end of February 1531-32. She is not to be identified with the Janet Forester married to James, junior, before 1527.

It thus appears, 1st, that, contrary to what Mr Maxwell says (p. 134), a James Wedderburn, senior, was bailie five years before James Wedderburn, junior, was so, as well as in 1523, the year after James, junior, was so: and even James, junior, was already a burghess of Dundee (according to Mr Miller's list, inserted p. lxxxiv) when James the poet matriculated at St Andrews University.

2d, That there were three Roberts witnessing charters between 1523 and 1527—i.e., before the course of Robert the poet was half finished at St Andrews—one a M[agister] Robertus, who was a chaplain and notary public, and is probably to be identified with the Robertus who entered at St Andrews in 1505, and graduated in 1511; a second, styled D[ominus] Robertus, who also was a chaplain and N.P., but had not taken the degree of M.A.; and a third, styled simply Robertus, who was neither chaplain nor in orders, and who it appears, was married and died before 1532. A D[ominus] Tho. Wedderburne, who was a chaplain and N.P., is also mentioned in several charters.

In the earlier volume of the Register (pp. 327, 413, 489) are charters between 1480 and 1495 attested by David Weddirburn,² and on p. 560 one attested by Rob. Wedderburn relating to the foundation of the

1. Precept for remission to George Wedderburn, brother-german of James Wedderburn, elder, burgess of Dundee, for assisting Archibald, some time Earl of Angus, against the King, &c. At Edinburgh, 6th December 1528. (Vol. viii. fol. 27.)

2. Respite granted to John Wedderburn for slaughter of the deceased John Thomsoun, to last for the space of nineteen years. At Edinburgh, 3rd April 1529. (Vol. viii. fol. 35.)

3. Gift in favour of James Wedderburn and William Wedderburn, and the rest of the children of David Wedderburn,¹ of the escheat of all goods, &c., which pertained to David Wedderburn, burgess of Dundee, and now pertaining, or that shall happen to pertain, to the Queen by reason of escheat, through the said David being fugitive from law and at the horn for the slaughter of David Rollok, burgess of the said burgh. At Edinburgh, 18th April 1543. (Vol. xvii. fol. 48.)

4. Gift to Patrick Lord Gray, his heirs and assignees, of the escheat of all goods, &c., which pertained to David Wedderburn, burgess of Dundee, or now pertaining or that may pertain to the Queen by escheat, and for same reason as stated in preceding entry. At Edinburgh, 6th April 1543. (Vol. xvii. fol. 53.)

5. Respite to Robert Wedderburn, son of James Wedderburn, burgess of Dundee, for the slaughter of — Malisoun, and for all action or crime. At Linlithgow, 6th January 1537-38. (Vol. xi. fol. 43.)

6. Letter of rehabilitation to Gilbert Wedderburn and John Pater-son, burgesses of Dundee, they having been convicted by the spiritual judge of heresy. At Linlithgow, 8th September 1538. (Vol. xii. fol. 23.)

This entry is brief, but refers for the full form to the one preceding, which is of the same kind, granted to James Annand,² George Annand, Robert Andersoun, John Flescheour,² and Alexander Flescheour, bur-

¹ Probably the David Wedderburn who had been admitted a burgess of Dundee in 1523, and whose son William had been admitted in 1535. A James and William Weddirburn, sons of umquhile David Weddirburn, are referred to, p. 597 of the Register of the Privy Council, 1545 . . . 1569.

² James Annand was Dean of Guild in 1539-40, and John Flescheour had been Dean in 1536-37. A Jo. Fleschar took his degrees at St Andrews the same years as Willelmus Wedderburn, and another of the family took his degrees in 1514 and Then follow the terms of rehabilitation in the usual form.

7. Gift to Robert Logan of Restalrig, knight, of the escheat goods, &c., which pertained to James Wedderburn, burgess of Dundee, and now in the Queen's hands, through the said James being at the horn for the slaughter of David Rollok, burgess of Dundee. At Edinburgh, 6th April 1543. (Vol. xvii. fol. 44.)

8. Gift to Andro Barré, elder, burgess of Dundee, of the escheat of all goods, &c., which pertained to Gilbert Wedderburn, burgess of the said burgh, and now in the Queen's hands, through the said Gilbert being at the horn for the slaughter of David Rollok, burgess of the said burgh. At Edinburgh, 16th April 1543. (Vol. xvii. fol. 47.)

9. Respite to James Wedderburn, Robert Wedderburn, John Smart, and Robert Child, for art and part of the slaughter of David Rollok, burgess of Dundee, committed in the said burgh in the month of March last. At Edinburgh, 27th July 1543. (Vol. xvii. fol. 80.)

10. Respite to David Wedderburn, burgess of Dundee, and four others, for art and part in the slaughter of David Rollok, burgess of the said burgh. At Edinburgh, 25th September 1543. (Vol. xviii. fol. 2.)

11. Remission to Gilbert Wedderburn, burgess of Dundee, for his remaining at home and absenting himself from the army,¹ and for art and part of the murder of George² [? David] Rollok, burgess of Dundee. At Stirling, 6th June 1544. (Vol. xviii. fol. 49.)

1516, the same years as John Scrimgeour, who rose to be Provost in Dundee, as did also James, who took his degrees in 1524-26. Henry and David Scrimgeour graduated in 1533-34, and Charles in 1534-36. Alexander Annand graduated in 1527-29, David Rollock in 1536, and James Halyburton in 1537-38. Thomas Clahills, who took his Bachelor's degree in 1523, George Clahills, who took his in 1526, and John Child, who took his in 1536, were all probably from the neighbourhood of Dundee. The John Sandilands who took the degree of M.A. in 1534 was very probably the one who was Robert Wedderburn's companion in Paris, and his lifelong friend.

Gift to Archibald Campbell of Murthlie, of the escheat of all goods, &c., which pertained to Robert Wedderburn, son to the deceased James Wedderburn, elder,¹ burghess of Dundee, and now in the Queen's hands, through his breaking of the fence and arrestment made on the third part of the teind sheaves of the Kirk of Dundee, by Alexander Blair, messenger. At Linlithgow, 16th August 1544. (Vol. xviii. fol. 77.)

13. Respite to Gilbert Wedderburn, burghess of Dundee, for art and part of the slaughter of David Rollok, burghess of Dundee, "committed on auld feid and forthought felony." At Linlithgow, 6th April 1545. (Vol. xix. fol. 2.)

14. Precept of legitimation to Robert and David Wedderburns, bastard sons of Mr Robert Wedderburn, vicar of Dundee. At Linlithgow, 13th January 1552. (Vol. xxv. fol. 43.)

15. Remission to David Wedderburn, elder, burghess of Dundee, James and William Wedderburns his sons, Thomas Gardin and James Abison,² for their violent deforcement of Robert Marshall, officer of the burgh of Dundee, in the execution of his office, on the 21st October 1553, and for hurting and wounding of the said Robert, on the same day in the time of the execution of his said office, committed on forthought felony. At Edinburgh, 14th December 1553. (Vol. xxvii. fol. 57.)

friend John Wedderburn, was accused of heresy, fled his country, and some years later became "Portar of Camfeir," a place which Maxwell (p. 79) identifies with Campvere in Holland, and his office with that of the "Conservator of Scots Privileges" there. Others, however, identify the place with Campher in Brittany, which had also a considerable trade with Dundee, and doubt whether the office of "Portar" "placed the holder at the head of the community" of Scots merchants as decisively as did that of "Conservator" at Campvere. A Joannes Moffat, however, had been, by royal charter, constituted "conservator privilegiorum Scotiae" within the bounds of Flanders, Zealand, and Brabant, at Dundee on 16th February 1526-27.—Acts Parl. Scot., vol. i. p. 331.

¹ From the entries given in ii. 7, 9, 12, it seems beyond question that the same James Wedderburn is referred to in all the three, that in the last he is designated as James Wedderburn elder, and that though deceased then, he is not represented as so in No. 9—that is, in 1543. Though designated as "elder" then, he falls to be identified with the James junior, who was bailie in 1522 and 1536, not with the James senior, who was bailie in 1517, and is supposed to have been his uncle or an older cousin. He was the eldest son of Robert W. and Janet Forrester or Froster. At the time of his death he was still "at the horn" and his property forfeited to the Crown; and the name of his widow was not Janet Barry but Janet Logan, as given in iv. 2.

² Sic in MS. Mr Millar suggests Alison—a name not unknown in Dundee at that time.

P. 296. Under date of 10th December 1564 James Wedderburn, "clerk of coquet of Dundé," who had made a seizure of the goods of Symon Clowson, master of a Dutch ship, is charged to restore them, under pain of rebellion, and "gif he fails to put him to the horn."

P. 517. Under date 10th June 1567, James Weddirburn, "baillie of the burgh of Dundé," summoned "for spulzeing the ship of Harrie Nauchtie lying off Bruchty, failed to appear, and was put to the horne, and all his movabill gudis escheit to our Sovereaine's use."

James Wedderburn and other four burgesses who paid the fine imposed crave to be reimbursed by the council and community.

iv. Acta Dominorum Concilii et Sessionis.

1. Letters purchased at the instance of James Skrimgeour, chanter of Brechin, against Gilbert Wedderburn, James Carnegy, John Flescher, James Luvell, and James Hay, making mention that the defenders had been lately accused of heresy, and the pursuer had for his safety obtained letters of lawburrows of them under the pain of £200. Nevertheless, the said defenders had, by sinister and wrong information, purchased letters against him. The Lords of Council suspend the letters purchased by the said Gilbert Wedderburn and his colleagues. (Vol. x. fol. 134, 12th July 1538.)

2. Action at the instance of the Queen and David Logane, burges of the Canongate of Edinburgh, cessioner and assignee constitute by Robert Logane of Restalrik, knight, in and to the escheat goods, debts, tacks, &c., which pertained to the deceased James Wedderburne,² burges of Dundee, against the abbot and convent of the Abbey of Lundoris, Jonet Logane, relict of the said deceased James Wedderburne, Mr James Bonar, now her spouse, James Blyth, Robert Seytoun, John Strathauchin, Roger Charteris, Andrew Ogilvy of Duntrune, John Baldovy of that Ilk, Andrew Irland, Robert Watson's wife, John Quhitit, Thomas Mylne, John Jacksoun, Cristiane Spens, Walter Barclay, and Alexander Carnegy, tenants of the lands which pertained to the said deceased James the time of the putting of him to the horn, and Robert Wedderburne his son, to hear and see all the goods, &c., which belonged to him decerned to pertain to the Queen and her said donator. Continued till 15th July instant. (Vol. xxi. fol. 13, 3rd July 1546.)²

3. The Lords of Council advocate the action and cause pursued of before by John Onsourik, burgess of Danskin, as procurator and factor for Jous Sywart and Winfray Ker, burgess of Danskin, against David Wedderburn, Alexander Patersoun, Robert Patersoun, Gilbert Quhite, John Fotheringhame, and Thomas Cristale, burgesses of Dundee, touching the spoliation by the defenders "of certane bowstringis and mastis furth of Michael Arnold's schip" in 1545. Continued till 26th January next. (Vol. xxii. fol. 59, 17th December 1546.)¹

v. Acts of Parliament of Scotland, vol. iii.

1. In the Roll of the Parliament which met at Edinburgh on 10th December 1540, there stand among the burgesses the names of Ja[cobus] Wedderburn et David Rollok pro Dundé; but in the Parliament which met on 14th March 1540-41, which passed the severe Acts against so-called heretics, the name of David Rollok only is found (pp. 356, 386).

2. David Rollok, James Wedderburne, and Maister David Strath-auchin, named as witnessing the execution of summons by Carrick Herald at the merkato croce of the bur^t of Dundé (p. 419).

3. The representatives of Dundee are summoned to answer for remaining away from the host in July 1545, and Robert Myn, Provost, and George Rollok appearing for them, agree to "come in the will" of the Governor (pp. 464, 465).

V. I now subjoin those notices supposed to have more immediate reference to the three poetical members of the clan.

i. From Row's 'Historie of the Kirk of Scotland,' sub anno 1558.

"As for more particular means whereby many in Scotland got some knowledge of God's truth, . . . there were some books set out, such as Sir David Lindesay his poesie upon the foure monarchies. . . . Wedderburn's Psalmes and Godlie Ballads changeing many of the old Popish songs unto godlie purposes."—P. 6.

¹ This process appears to have "dragged its slow length along" for several years, and finally to have been decided by the bailies of Dundee on 10th November 1550, who found that the bowstrings, &c., "war nocht lawful prize nor fremit guids, but pertein to friends—burgesses of Danskyne—as their awn proper guids, and David and his colleagues war compellit to pay for them to the factor of the said merchants" (Maxwell's 'Old Dundee,' pp. 262, 263). This David falls to be identified with David Wedderburn, elder, of ii. 15. Mr Maxwell, however, identifies him with David the son of the vicar. But if this son had grown up to man's estate by 1546, he must have been born before 1526—that is, before Robert the poet matriculated at St Andrews. Since this note was put in type, it has, however, been clearly shown that the sons of the vicar were very young at the time of their legitimation, and did not come of age till 1571 (see 'The Wedderburn Book,' vol. i. pp. 18, 19).

iv. From Calderwood's 'History of the Kirk of Scotland,' vol. i. pp. 141-143, Wodrow Society's edition.¹

"This yeere [1540] James Wedderburne, eldest sonne to James Wedderburne, merchant at Dundie, called James Wedderburne at the West Kirk Stile, was delated to the King, and letters of captioun directed to take him. He departed secreetlie to France, and remained at Rowan and Deepe till he deceassed. He had beene brought up in Sanct Leonard's Colledge in his youth, in the time of the gouernement of Johne Duke of Albanie, and was reasonable weill instructed in philosophie and humanitie. Thereafter he went to France, where he played the merchant. After his returne, he was instructed in religion by James Hewat, a Blacke frier at Dundie. He confirmed the doctrine which the other had receaved in his youth, in St Leonard's Colledge, under Mr Gawin Logie. This James had a good gift of poesie, and made diuerse comedeis and tragedeis in the Scottish tongue, wherein he nipped the abusses and superstitioun of the time. He composed in forme of tragedie the beheading of Johne the Baptist, which was acted at the West Port of Dundie, wherin he carped roughlie the abusses and corruptions of the Papists. He compiled the Historie of Dyonisius the Tyranne, in form of a comedie, which was acted in the play-feild of the said burgh, wherin he likewise nipped the Papists. He counterfooted also the conjuring of a ghaist, which was, indeed, practised by Frier Laing, beside Kingorne, which Frier Laing had beene confessor to the King. But after this conjuring the King was constrained, for shame, to remove him. When he was at Deepe, the factors at Deepe, Johne Meldrum, Henrie Tod, Johne Mowat, Gilbert Scot, delated him to the Bishop of Rowan; but the bishop refused to meddle with him, becaus they could prove nothing against him. They informed the bishop and channons of Rowan, that he was declared an heretick in Scotland: the bishop desired them to send for the processe, and that being tryed, he sould have no residence there. We heare no farther but that he remained as factor at Deepe, and deing, said to his sonne, 'We have beene acting our part in the theater: you are to succeed; see that you act your part faithfullie!'

"Mr Johne Wedderburne, his brother, brought up also in the course of philosophie, under Mr Gawin Logic, being perswaded by his freinds, albeit against his will, he tooke on the order of preesthood, and was a preest in Dundie. But soone after he beganne to professe the [Reformed] religioun. Being summouned, he departed to Almaine, where he heard Luther and Melancton, and became verie fervent and zealous. He translated manie of Luther's dytements into Scottish meeter, and the Psalmes of David. He turned manie bawdie songs and rymes in godlie rymes. He returned after the death of the King, in December 1542, but was againe persued by the cardinall, and fled to England.

"Mr Robert Wedderburne, the youngest brother, brought up also under Mr Gawin, excelled his brother both in humanitie and knowledge of the Scriptures. He succeeded to Mr Robert Barrie,¹ vicar of Dundie. He went to Parise, where he remained cheeflie in companie of those that were instructed in religioun, as Mr Alexander Hay, N. Sandelands, sonne to the Laird of Calder, in West Lothiane, and Lord of Sanct Johne, whose father and whole familie were most zealous in advancing of religioun. After the death of the Cardinall, he returned to Scotland. The vicar, his mother's brother, being departed, he got possessioun of the vicarage, but remained for the most part with the Laird of Calder. When he was comming home out of the east countreis, in a Danskein ship, the shippe was driven by contrarie winds upon Norway, where the passingers landed at Ripperwicke, and remained certane dayes. In the meane time, upon the Saturday before Whitsonday even, 1546, after continuall disputing and reasoning among the passingers, some Popish, and some Protestants, he, and the rest of his fellowes, tooke the boldnesse, notwithstanding they understood nothing of the cardinall's death, to make his pourtraiture, or statue, of a great oaken blocke, and there-upon write his name in paper affixed theron. They accuse him, condemne him, and burne his statue in a great fire of timber. The cardinall was slaine that same verie day, in the morning, in his owne castell of Sanct Andrewes."

The chief conclusions to which, after repeated consideration of these various notices, I had felt warranted to come were—(1) That early in the fifteenth century—certainly not later than the date assigned by Douglas—a branch of the Berwickshire Wedderburns had settled in Dundee or its neighbourhood, for as early as 1434 I find a Wedderburn, bearing the Christian name of John (one of the commonest in the family), graduating at St Andrews, and therefore matriculated about 1430. (2) That by the beginning of the sixteenth century the Wedderburns of Dundee might be spoken of almost as a clan rather than a family. (3) That the two James Wedderburns mentioned by Douglas are hardly to be identified, as they seem to be, by Mr Laing and Mr Maxwell, with Calderwood's James Wedderburn, merchant, "at the West Kirk Stile," and his eldest son James, for the first James is represented by Douglas as coming to Dundee about 1430, and flourishing in the reign of James III., the second as flourishing in the reign of James IV., and his son John as flourishing in the reign of James V., and thus probably to be identified with the John who matriculated at St Andrews in 1504, while the Robert who matriculated at St Andrews in 1505, and graduated in 1511, and witnessed various charters between 1523 and 1527, as well as the James who matriculated in 1507, were possibly younger brothers of this John. (4) That no materials as yet accessible to me enable me to explain the exact relation between this branch, and Calderwood's 'James Wedderburn at the West Kirk Stile' in the reign of James V., and his eldest son James who matriculated at St Andrews in 1514, and his younger sons, John who matriculated in 1525 and graduated in 1528, and Robert who matriculated in 1526 and graduated in 1530, who came under the influence of the nascent reformers at St Andrews, and were the chief authors of the collection of "Gude and Godlie Ballates," here reprinted.

From the age at which young men of their rank of life generally entered the University, I should suppose that James was probably born shortly before 1500, and finished his course the year after the outbreak of the Reformation in Germany; that John was born about 1508, and was brought in contact with Buchanan, Hamilton, Alesius, and Logie, when reforming opinions first reached Scotland; and that Robert was born a year or two later than John, and, more immediately than he, under the charge of Logie, who before 1526 had risen to be Principal of St Leonard's College. James, though, like many young men of the better class in Dundee in that age and for long after, taking a university training, was intended for his father's profession, in due time went abroad to learn it more fully, and to acquire a knowledge of foreign languages, then returned to Dundee and continued to reside chiefly there till 1539-40. "Letters of caption" being then issued against him, "he departed secretly" to France, and appears to have remained at Rouen or Dieppe till he died. At both places special privileges¹ had been conceded to the Scots, and at both places there were Scottish merchants or factors. It was through these ports that the trade with France was chiefly carried on, and Dundee was one of the principal ports through which that trade, as well as that with the Baltic ports, was carried on; and probably in that age no single firm had so large a share in both as the firm or firms of the Wedderburns. The younger brothers, John and Robert, were evidently intended for the clerical profession; both by 1530 had become Masters of Arts; and after that date they are not too readily to be identified with the transactions of any John or Robert in the clan whose Christian name is not preceded by the designation "Maister" or its initial M.

After the preceding part of this Appendix had been drawn up and put in type, Alexander Wedderburn, Esq., Q.C., of 47 Cadogan Place,

London, most kindly placed at my service part of the proofs of the very careful and elaborate account of the several branches of the family of the Wedderburns of Angus, which, after a thorough research in the charter-chests of the family, the Records of the Burgh of Dundee, and many of the public Records, he has prepared and is getting privately printed for the use of the family under the title of 'The Wedderburn Book.' I regret much that I do not as yet see my way to agree with him in some minor points, and especially in identifying John, the son of James the poet, with John, the son of the second James of Douglas, who, so far as I can ascertain, belonged to an earlier generation,—this John being already at college when the father of the other John was still a boy.¹ But I gratefully own my obligations to him for much valuable counsel and guidance, and I gladly refer to his work for a complete genealogy of the Wedderburns, and for many particulars about the "clan" in the sixteenth century, as to which I must content myself with inserting the brief summary he has most kindly sent me:—

"There were certainly," Mr Wedderburn says, "four distinct families—viz., those of

"i. James Wedderburn,² who married Janet Barry, and was father of the 'Gude and Godlie Ballates' triumvirate, and progenitor of John Wedderburn, [who rose first to be Professor of Mathematics in the University of Padua, and afterwards to be] 'Protomedicus' in Moravia (1583-1651), and some of whose descendants, it is said, are still to be

² The most certain of the entries relating to him on which I have yet come are those in the Exchequer Rolls from 1510 to 1514, from which it appears that he entered on office as one of the "custumars" of Dundee on 19th April 1510, and gave in his accounts from that date on 11th August 1510 (Exchequer Rolls, vol. 1508-1513, p. 363), and so annually for 1511, 1512, 1513 (pp. 384, 489, 578). During these years he also gave in the accounts of the bailies of Dundee, though it is not expressly stated that he was one of their number (pp. 375, 398, 498). In the following year "Janet Barry, relict of the late James Wedderburn," gives in the custumar accounts from 30th July to 1st November 1513, which was probably the date of her husband's death (vol. 1513-1522, p. 50). In all these entries he is named simply "Jacobus Wedderburn," not "de Wedderburn," though several of the custumars of the previous half century are honoured with the prefix de to their surname. It has been supposed that it is he who, in the 'Acta Dominorum Auditorum,' under date 9th May 1491 (vol. 1466-1494, p. 149), is named James of Wedderburn. But this is rather doubtful, and certainly it is not his son and heir, but James, son of Robert, who, in the Dundee Protocol Book of 1518-1534, is twice styled James of Wedderburn, though even he is more frequently styled James Wedderburn, Bailie. The chief value of this Decret of the Lords Auditors seems to me to be that it shows the Wedderburns were already, in the end of the fifteenth century, making commercial ventures into those Scandinavian kingdoms where ultimately they had a branch establishment.

found there; and James Wedderburn, [the confidant of Archbishop Laud, who was Professor of Divinity in St Mary's College, St Andrews, and afterwards became Dean of the Chapel Royal and] Bishop of Dumblane (1585-1639).

“ii. Walter Wedderburn in the Welgait, progenitor of a branch of the family long resident in Fife—at Cupar, Pittormie, and elsewhere.

“iii. David Wedderburn in the Moraygait, father of David Wedderburn of Craigie, who married Helen Lawson, and was progenitor of the Craigie branch of the family.

“iv. Robert Wedderburn, who married Janet Froster, and was progenitor of the families of Kingennie, Easter Powrie, Wedderburn, Blackness, Balindean, and Gosford, who were long distinguished in the annals of their burgh, county, and country.”

The following additional particulars regarding the three poets are almost all derived from his work, though they are here inserted somewhat in my own words, and accompanied with extracts from the Dundee Protocol Book, 1518-1534, which I have myself verified, and Mr Maitland Anderson has copied out for me:—

1. James, the eldest son of the merchant-burgess at the West Kirk Stile, was born probably a little before 1500, admitted as burgess on 17th October 1517 (Lock. Bk.), entered as heir to his father in an annualrent 28th September 1521 (Prot. Bk.), and as such heir got sasine on 29th November 1531 of a land in St Mary's Close¹ in N. Marketgait (ibid.) He is often named in the records of the burgh in 1521-23 and 1531-37.² After 1537 the only references to him are on 10th November 1550, “when part of a cargo of wine, sent from Dieppe to Dundee, is described as the property of James Wedderburn of Deip (Burgh Rec.),” and “3rd November 1553, when his son John is returned heir to him” (‘Wedderburn Book,’ vol. i. pp. 22, 23). It may have been he who, along with David Lovell, represented Dundee in the first Scottish Parliament of 1540, but did not in the second (1541), in which so many severe Acts against heretics were passed; and it may have been he who is mentioned, in the volume of the Exchequer Rolls just issued, as being in 1533 "unus ballivorum burgi de Dundé." Mr Wedderburn, however, refers these entries to the James who was the son of Robert Wedderburn, and was "at the horn" in 1544.

2. John Wedderburn is rarely mentioned in the Dundee records, probably on account of his frequent and prolonged absences from the burgh. There is a John Wedderburn named as present at a transaction on 30th August 1527, who is no doubt he; and the same remark applies to Mr John Wedderburn, chaplain of St Matthew's chapel, who resigns some land to Alexander Fife, 1532-33 (ibid., pp. 14, 15).¹ The records make no mention of the parts of Germany he visited between 1539-1542, or the parts of England where he passed his later exile, or the way he earned his livelihood. It is possible that he is the John Wedderburn "complainer in a proceeding before the English Courts in 1547-51," "but this is quite speculative" (ibid.) Still more so is the suggestion of Maxwell, that he became secularised and is to be identified with the previous John. Like some other Scottish exiles he would, during the reign of Edward VI., have been entitled to hold a benefice, or act as a chaplain or curate, or even, without forfeiting his clerical status, to marry a wife, though there is no evidence that he ever did so (Book, vol. i. pp. 14, 15).

3. Robert Wedderburn, "though a priest, was long the lover of Isobell Lovell, and, by her, the father of two sons who were legitimatised by the Crown" in 1552. The first mention of him in the Dundee records occurs on 10th May 1528 (Prot. Bk.), when "Robert Wedderburn binds himself quickly to receive institution or collation to the chaplaincy of St Katrine, and as soon as possible to accept the order of presbyter, and abide continually in the daily service of the church of Dundee."² Mr Wedderburn does not think, as some others do, that he was ever admitted a burghess of Dundee, and he also says that "from 1530 down to 1546" he seems to have lived abroad. Certainly till May 1530 he was at St Andrews, and at Dundee till 1533. I should rather suppose that he would not go abroad till after his early and lifelong friend, young Sandelands of Calder, finished his course in St Andrews (as he did in 1534 or 1536) and was ready to go to Paris with him. He returned to Scotland in 1546, but, according to Calderwood, remained for the most part with the laird of Calder. "There is," Mr Wedderburn says, "an interesting charter by him, dated 10th March 1551-52, by which, after reciting that his house had been destroyed in the war 'between us and our auld enemies the English,'¹ he undertakes to repair it and feu the same to James Lovell, reserving for himself and his successors in office one chamber, to be used as the vicar's chamber in all time coming."—('Wedderburn Book,' vol. i. pp. 16-18; also Maxwell's 'Old Dundee,' p. 148, and Millar's 'Eminent Burghesses of Dundee,' pp. 21, 22.)

² Robertus Wedderburn "obligavit se quatenus cito recipiet institutionem seu collationem capellanie sancte Katrine virginis, . . . et in omni possibilitate incontinenter accipiet ordinem presbyteratus, et permanebit continue in servicio quotidiano sancte ecclesie parochialis de Dundé." At this time he was still under age, and the chaplaincy was proposed to be given to him, as a similar benefice was given to Calvin at Pont l'Évêque in France, and more valuable ones were given to Patrick

and John Hamilton in Scotland, to aid in defraying expenses during residence at a University. Of course, under the privileges conceded by Papal Bulls to students at St Andrews, he would be exempt, while there, from the obligation personally to perform the duties of the chaplaincy; but, singularly enough, it appears to be doubtful whether he performed them even after leaving the University. For under date 7th December 1532 we come on the following entry in the Dundee Protocol Book: "Personaliter constitutus Magister Robertus Wedderburn vicarius de Dundé, fatetur, se plane nullum jus nec clameum habere ad capellaniam Ste Katrie Virginis situatam infra ecclesiam parochialem de Dundé, nec ad aliquam presentationem eiusdem, et si quam habuit seu habet, ibidem simpliciter in favorem domini Thome Bell demisit."

This of course terminated any connection he may have had with S. Katrine's chaplaincy; but by naming him as vicar of Dundee at that date, it rather conflicts with the commonly received opinion that it was not till some years after his return to Scotland, and after the death of the Cardinal, that he obtained the vicarage. The only explanation I can suggest is, that in the first fervour of his reforming zeal he may, before going abroad, have resigned it to the second John Barrie, and that after Barrie's death in 1551, when his opinions, as expressed in the 'Complaynt of Scotland,' had become more moderate, and Archbishop Hamilton was professedly trying to reform the Church from within, he may have deemed himself warranted to accept a new presentation to it; or alternatively, that Barrie throughout was not really vicar, though occasionally named as such in the records, but simply Wedderburn's locum tenens, just as some one else must have been after Barrie's death, if the vicar continued still to live "mostly" with the laird of Calder. One might have been disposed to assign both these entries to the elder Robert who graduated in 1511, had it not been that in the former, when the younger was still a non-graduate, he appears simply as Robertus, but in the second as Magister Robertus.

V. MR ROBERT WEDDERBURN, SUPPOSED AUTHOR OF THE 'COMPLAYNT OF SCOTLAND.'

I. *From Mr Laing's Preface to his Reprint of 1868 of the
'Gude and Godlie Ballates.'*

"Another circumstance that falls to be noticed in connexion with the name of Wedderburn is the authorship of that curious little prose work, the 'Complaynt of Scotland,' printed, it is supposed, at St Andrews¹ in 1549. Two 'slight and contradictory notices constitute' (says Dr Leyden) 'all the information which has as yet been discovered concerning the author.' In the catalogues of the Harleian Library, 1742 and 1745, a copy of the book is twice entered as 'Wedderburn's Complaine of Scotland,' 1549. It was conjectured that Wedderburn's name might have occurred on the title-page, which is not preserved in any existing copy. On the other hand, Dr George Mackenzie, who is extremely inaccurate in his statements, describes the work as having been written by a Sir James Inglis, knight, who, he says, died at Culross in 1554. It is quite clear that he confounded some imaginary person with the Sir James Inglis, Abbot of Culross, whom Sir D. Lyndsay commemorates among the Scottish Poets, but who was murdered in 1531. Regarding Inglis's claim, I may refer to a long note in Dunbar's Poems, vol. ii. p. 398. Dr Leyden, in republishing the 'Complaynt' itself (Edinburgh, 1801), attempted, but not successfully, to establish a claim for Sir David Lyndsay to have been the author.

"As this question of authorship is one in the literary history of Scotland which some persons may consider to be of greater interest than even that of 'The Godlie Ballates,' I may add a few words on the subject. I do not apprehend that the name either of author or printer occurred in the book itself. The Harleian copy was probably obtained by Harley, Earl of Oxford, with other similar books relating to Scotland, from James Anderson, author of the 'Diplomata Scotiæ,' and it may have had the name of Wedderburn written on the title-page or fly-leaf. . . .

"The ordinary statements that the three brothers Wedderburn became exiles on account of religion, and the supposed time of their decease, seemed to place their claims out of the question. According to Johnston's verses, printed at page xxv, John Wedderburn, indeed, is said to have been driven into exile in 1546, and to have died in England in 1556. But these dates cannot be relied upon, as we know that he was in exile in 1539; and, after Cardinal Beaton's death in 1546, there was something like toleration in Scotland, which cannot be said to have existed in England during the fires of persecution in Queen Mary's reign (1553 to 1558).¹ Mr Robert Wedderburn, Vicar of Dundee, having however survived till after the date of printing, leads me now to add that, notwithstanding some apparent discrepancies, by far the most probable conjecture is that he was the author of the 'Complaynt.' Indeed, from what has been stated above, as the Vicar, in 1553, was still alive, and officially connected with the Romish Church, I have little hesitation in assigning to Mr Robert Wedderburn, Vicar of Dundee, the credit of being the author of that remarkable production, 'The Complaynt of Scotland,' printed (at St Andrews) in 1549. In coming to this conclusion we have his residence in the vicinity of St Andrews, the general tone and character of the book, as conveying the sentiments of one who was perhaps inclined in his heart to be a Reformer, although retaining his connexion with the Romish Church, and who imitated Sir David Lyndsay in exposing (with a deal of pedantic learning) the prevailing abuses of the time; and more especially his familiarity with the popular literature of the time, while enumerating the names of songs, dances, &c., of which Dr Leyden mentions seven among those which Wedderburn himself is supposed to have 'metamorphosed' in the present collection of 'Gude and Godlie Ballates.'

2. From Maxwell's 'Old Dundee prior to the Reformation.'

"Notwithstanding the force of these reasons, some authorities are unwilling to accept them as altogether conclusive. They may however, I think, be supported by others even stronger and more convincing. Dr Murray in the reprint of the 'Complaynt,' which he edited for the Early English Text Society, while unprepared to assign the authorship to any other person, and admitting that the book must have been written by a Churchman, contends that Wedderburn's claim cannot be substantiated, because one who had associated himself with Protestants in Paris, and had assisted in burning the great Cardinal's effigy, could not have been the writer of a book wherein the author shows himself a partisan of the French faction, of which the Cardinal was the hero, deals mildly with the errors of the clergy 'who sin against light,' and contents himself with giving them a general exhortation 'to repent their negligence and remedy their great abusion.' But this reason is certainly not conclusive, for Dr Murray might have much more forcibly said that one who had done these inimical acts toward the old Church could not afterwards have accepted a benefice in it; and yet we know that Wedderburn did so, and died Vicar of Dundee. He further urges against Wedderburn's claim that the book is partly written in the dialect prevalent in the South of Scotland, and that he was a native of the North. Now, although it may be found to contain some forms of words peculiar to the Southern dialect, I do not think that any substantial argument against the probability of its author having been born in Dundee and educated in Fife can thereon be founded. These places adjoin the southern division of the country, toward which their speech has a closer affinity than to that of the northern portion of the Lowlands; and we must bear in mind that Calderwood has told us that Wedderburn lived much with the laird of Calder in West Lothian, and therefore he must have been familiar with the speech of that district. On carefully looking over the Dundee Burgh Records, written at the same time as the 'Complaynt,' and mostly by the members of the Wedderburn family, it will be found—taking consideration of the wide diversity of subjects—that their language and that of the book show a decided correspondence, and the writing of both may be reasonably assigned to the same locality. Besides, it must be borne in mind that the common literary language used throughout Scotland during the sixteenth century was the southern, not the northern dialect. The frequent use of French words in the 'Complaynt,' which Mr Murray attributes to their prevalence in Scotland, may also in great measure be accounted for by the author's long residence in Paris."—Pp. 140, 141. "The wal at the world's end"—a tale which Robert Chambers has localised as prevalent only in Fife—used, however, to be also current in Dundee (p. 146), and, I may add, even farther north in Angus; and if the tale of the "reid etin" had passed out of remembrance, the name, as well as that of the "water-kelpie," was often used by nurses to frighten and quiet unruly children after nightfall.

¹ Like other partisans of the English alliance, he would be tolerated by Henry VIII. in 1546, and during the whole of the reign of Edward VI. he would have more than toleration. Even Knox managed to stay on in England for a year after the death of Edward; and as an assured Scot, if he conducted himself quietly, John Wedderburn would be left alone. He had, as Johnston hints, offended the priests too deeply by his satires to get the benefit of any little toleration they allowed,* just as Knox had by his preaching in St Andrews Castle and association with the conspirators there.

* "Hinc nullum magis invisum caput hostibus."

The strongest proof, however, is unquestionably, as Maxwell states, that the scenery (pp. 145, 146) in the neighbourhood of Dundee—i.e., between the Tay and the high grounds above it, the lovely valley of the Dichty¹ beyond them and the Sidlaws which shut in the view on the north—so closely corresponds with that described by the author in chap. vi., as also that encounter between the two vessels of war in the estuary, witnessed from the rising ground above the “Stanners,” and that no other district has yet been fixed on which at all closely corresponds, and where English warships were at that date so likely to be met as in the Firth by Broughty Castle. This struck me thirty years ago when first I read the book, and has been greatly confirmed by subsequent reperusals of it.

¹ Old Dundee, p. 145. The mills and bleachfields, now so numerous on its banks, have polluted its once pure and pellucid waters, and driven from it, even in May, "the pretty fysche with vermeil fynnis and skalis lyik the brycht silvyr"; but up to the end of last century, while bleachfields were fewer and their processes less noxious, the writers of the old statistical accounts of the parishes tell that there were still to be found in it, in spring, burn trouts and pike and perch of moderate size, and on its banks plenty of shady wood, rich green pastures, and yet undrained

APPENDIX II.

GEORGE WISHART (p. xxxvii).

For a full account of this revered confessor and martyr I must refer my readers to Lorimer's 'Scottish Reformation,' Moffat Scott's 'Martyrs of Angus and Mearns,' Rogers' 'George Wishart,' my own lecture in the first series of St Giles' Lectures, and the corresponding lecture of my friend Dr Kidd in the United Presbyterian series of Lectures on the Scottish Reformation.¹ It seems now to be established beyond reasonable doubt that he was either the nephew of Sir James Wishart of Pittarrow, or a younger son by his wife, Elizabeth Learmonth, sister of Sir James Learmonth of Balcomie, who for many years was Provost of St Andrews. He was educated at King's College, Aberdeen, and took the degree of Master of Arts. From early years he seems to have been specially intimate with John Erskine, Laird of Dun and Provost of Montrose. In fact, the earliest notice we have of him is as M. Geo. Wishart, witnessing a charter granted by his friend Erskine at Montrose on 20th March 1534-35.² This leaves no doubt that he was then about Montrose, and lends confirmation to the tradition which Petrie—himself a native of Montrose—says he received from ancient men who in their youth had seen and known the Reformer, that then or soon after he acted as assistant or successor to Marsilier, whom Erskine had brought from France to teach Greek, and that he read the Greek New Testament with some of his pupils. For this, in 1538, he was delated to the Bishop of Brechin and summoned before him, but chose rather to flee than appear in answer to the summons. He found shelter under Bishop Latimer, whose diocese comprehended Gloucester and Bristol as well as Worcester, as his fellow-exiles Macchabæus and Fyffe(?) had previously done under Shaxton at Salisbury. Like them, on the passing of the statute of the Six Articles he fled to the Continent, and continued there for at least two years, spending the time chiefly in East Switzerland and the Rhinelands. The year 1543 he spent chiefly in Benet or Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, both studying and teaching. It is from Emery Tilney, his pupil there, that we have the fullest account of his appearance and habits; and in one of the stained-glass windows of the College, place has been given for a touching memorial of him. Above the arms of archbishops and nobles, distinguished alumni of the College, stands the name of George Wishart with the martyr's crown over it. A portrait of him is preserved in Blairs College, and another, deemed by Laing not unworthy of Holbein, taken in 1543, anno ætatis thirty, is in possession of a descendant of the Wishart family.¹ Petrie and several of the later authorities place his return to Scotland in 1544, and for that and other reasons refuse to identify him with the "Scottishman named Wysshart" sent in April 1544 as envoy from Crichton of Brunstane to Hertford and Henry VIII., to give details of a plot to apprehend or slay the Cardinal. In addition to the reasons against identifying this envoy with the martyr adduced by the late Professor Weir in his able paper in the 'North British Review' for 1868, it has always appeared to me that an outlawed man who came down from England under protection, and always in his preaching tours travelled under protection,² was the last man likely to have been chosen for such a mission. And now it has been established beyond all doubt that there were not only other Wisharts more likely to have been chosen, but another George Wishart—a merchant, and ultimately a bailie in Dundee—who was a zealous and persistent supporter of the English alliance, and who, as Maxwell in his 'Old Dundee prior to the Reformation' (p. 92) says, allied himself with the unquiet spirits concerned in the plot, and who was afterwards accused of traitorous correspondence with those of them who seized the Castle of St Andrews and slew the Cardinal. He and his friends may have suspected the Reformer also to have been concerned in the plots, though they did not dare to charge him with it at his trial, and he himself in the most solemn manner asserted his innocence in his affecting address at the stake: "I beseech the Father of heaven to forgive them that have of any ignorance, or else of any evil mind, forged lies upon me. I forgive them with all my heart."

It is supposed that for a short time after his return to Scotland he lived quietly at Pittarrow, in the parish of Fordoun, where the shrine of St Palladius was preserved, and being an accomplished artist, occupied himself with adorning the ancestral mansion with several beautiful fresco paintings, which, after being long covered over by the wainscot, were again brought to light in the present century, but unfortunately were destroyed before their value was perceived. Dr Leslie of Fordoun, who saw them, has thus described the most remarkable of them: "Above the largest fireplace in the great hall was a painting of the city of Rome, and a grand procession going to St Peter's. The Pope, adorned with the tiara and mounted on horseback, was attended by a large company of cardinals on foot, richly dressed, but all uncovered. At a little distance, directly in front of the procession, stood a beautiful white palfrey, finely caparisoned,

² Dr M'Crie in Note H., p. 15, in his 'Life of Knox,' gives the following excerpt from the Lord Treasurer's books: "Item (March 16, 1545-46), to summon the Laird of Ormiston to underlie the law in Edinburgh the xii of April next to cum, for resetting of Maister George Wischeart, he being at the horn, &c."

held by some persons who were well dressed, but uncovered. Beyond them was the Cathedral of St Peter, the doors of which appeared to be open. Below the picture were written the following lines of covert sarcasm on the Pope :—

‘ IN PAPAM.

Laus tua non tua fraus, virtus non gloria rerum
Scandete te fecit hoc decus eximium ;
Pauperibus sua dat gratis nec munera curat
Curia Papalis, quod more percipimus.
Hæc carmina potius legenda, cancos imitando.’”

As Dr George Cook long ago surmised, the lines are not original. One evening, as I returned to Guildford Street after a long day in the British Museum, I had occasion to pass through Red Lion Square and the alley to the east of it, where I saw exposed in a pawnbroker's window a little antique volume in a very dilapidated state, opened at the page which contained these lines almost verbatim, and I at once purchased it, and on further examination I found it had been published at Basle in 1537 — i.e., a few years before Wishart was there.

It may not be inappropriate as a conclusion to this note to state how far the organisation of the Reformed Church had by this time advanced in Scotland. Patrick Hamilton seems to me to have laboured to the last for the revival of Scriptural teaching and Christian living, within the Old Church rather than apart from her. Alesius, and some others of his disciples, were for a time reluctant to separate from her, if her rulers could have been persuaded seriously to set about repairing acknowledged evils and defects. But Wishart and those who came under his influence seem to have abandoned this struggle, and to have striven for the formation of a new organisation apart from the old one. He formed kirks or congregations at least in Montrose and Dundee—the former consisting probably mainly of the lesser gentry in the adjacent district of Angus and Mearns, and the latter chiefly of the substantial burghers of the town of Dundee. I suppose that some forms of discipline began to be put in practice in the Dundee congregation, and that it was on that account, as well as from the remarkable revival which had taken place under his ministrations, that the town came to be spoken of as “the Scottish Geneva.” The New Testament of Tyndale's translation had been introduced both there and in Montrose as early as 1526, and by this time the subsequent editions had been largely imported, and since 1543 might be openly read.¹ John Wedderburn was then in his native city, and I suppose by that date had published in its most rudimentary form his ‘Psalms and Spiritual Songs,’ largely translated from the German. John Scott, the printer, was also there and under suspicion of the authorities in Edinburgh. Of the Psalms and Hymns, one, as I have already mentioned, bears unmistakable reference to the pest then infecting the town of Dundee; another was sung by Wishart the evening on which he was apprehended in East Lothian; a third is certainly referred to in the 'Complaynt of Scotland,' which, being published as early as 1549, is a guarantee for the earlier existence of the hymn.¹ This rudimentary collection of Psalms and Spiritual Songs was the book of praise in family and social gatherings of the Reformed, until the Genevan Psalter came into use, and no doubt the initial Catechism was in use also.² The earliest editions of it have perished. A nearly complete copy of the edition of 1567 has, however, been preserved, and now at last reprinted.

The translation of the First Helvetic Confession which Wishart made soon after his visit to the Continent, was no doubt meant as the Confession of the churches he formed, though it may only have been extant then in manuscript, and not published till 1548. That fragment of the Communion Office which was used by Knox in the administration of the Lord's Supper at Berwick in 1550, and perhaps had been used by him at St Andrews in 1547, and which was recently brought to light again by Dr Lorimer from among the MSS. in Dr Williams's library in London, was almost certainly derived from Wishart; for part of it is translated from the Office of the Church of Zürich, with which he could not fail to have become acquainted during his residence there, and part from other German offices, which were more likely to have fallen in his way (who had been a traveller on the Continent) than in Knox's. It may even have been used by Wishart in 1545 when he dispensed the communion in both kinds at Dun. The same may be said of that interesting burial service which purports to have been used in the kirk at Montrose, and has been reprinted in the 'Miscellany' of the Wodrow Society; though probably this, as we now have it, may not be the original form, but a recension of it, made later, under the auspices of Erskine of Dun, Superintendent of Angus and Mearns. The foundations of the superstructure that was to be were thus laid by Wishart. It was reserved to his successor to raise it, as the martyr had predicted it would be raised, even to the copestone.

² It has been conjectured that the Catechism may even have been printed separately, and that the first part of the following entry in Dickson and Edmond's Annals may refer to it. The Catechisme, in two partes; the first in Scotis poetry, having a Kalendar before it; the second part in Latin and Scotis prose, entitled Catechismus ecclesie, Geneuensis, &c. Edinburgh: Imprintit by John Ross for Henry Charteris, 1574. The title as given above is from Herbert's edition of Ames, p. 1497.

APPENDIX III.

THE SPIRITUALISING OF SECULAR SONGS AND APPROPRIATION OF THEIR TUNES¹ (p. lxi).

i. Extracts from 'Chansonnier Huguenot.'

"Un autre soin tout chrétien qu'ils [poètes Huguenots] prenaient était d'accommoder leurs pieuses chansons aux airs à la mode. Par là ils atteignaient doublement leur but : ils substituaient dans la mémoire publique des paroles d'édification à des vers licencieux, et la popularité de l'air servit à répandre au loin la bonne semence contenue dans les vers. Les chansons profanes leur fournissaient même souvent le thème de leurs vers ; il leur suffisait pour cela de jouer sur le sens des mots, et de tourner un modèle quelconque à la façon d'Eustorg de Beaulieu par exemple, qui de—

'Ma chère Dame ayez de moy mercy,' faisait plus facilement du monde

'Mon Createur ayez de moy mercy
Et regardez mon cœur.'

Ces métamorphoses sont continuelles dans notre 'Chansonnier,' et chaque pièce y commence par le contraste assez piquant, qui se trouve entre son contenu et le thème ordinairement très-libre auquel elle se réfère."

Then it is stated that towards the end of the sixteenth century a new collection of spiritual songs appeared, none of which were satirical or polemical, and hardly any of them were borrowed from previous collections, and which, in place of borrowing the airs of worldly songs, had recourse for their music to the Psalms of Marot or Beza. Yet, by a happy contradiction, there stands at the commencement of the volume a preface which, after explaining at some length and in a very interesting manner the details briefly referred to above, clearly shows the religious spirit which found expression in all the older collections, and traces back to an earlier time than the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries the practice of appropriating secular tunes to religious and more worthy themes. From this preface we subjoin one or two extracts :—

“Theodoret, ancien théologien, raconte au 27^e chapitre du iv^e livre de son Histoire ecclésiastique, qu’environ le temps de Valentinian et de Valens, . . . un certain Harmonius composa des chansons profanes à la musique fort douce, dont plusieurs furent séduits et tiréz à perdition. Mais Dieu, qui dès le commencement a tiré la lumière des ténèbres, suscita à ce même temps un excellent personnage nommé Ephräim [Syrus] lequel, entre autres services notables qu’il fit à l’Eglise, y adjousta celui-ci, à sçavoir, qu’il changea la lettre méchante des chansons d’Harmonius, et y appliqua un sens spirituel et à louange de Dieu, remédiant (dit Theodoret) joyeusement et utilement au mal que poëte lascif avoit fait. . . . Comme l’entreprise sainte d’Ephräim succéda heureusement, et les chansons profanes qu’il changea tout à propos furent bien reçues des vrais chrétiens, alors la confusion estant tombée sur l’ésprit de vanité et de mensonge, nous pouvons dire la mesme de ce qui est advenu depuis 60 ans en ça. L’ennemi de la sainte verité, sentant que Dieu vouloit ramener au jour une grande connoissance de l’Evangile, suscita en divers endroits, notamment en la France, des poëtes qui commencèrent de semer, à l’exemple d’Harmonius, des chansons pleines de vanité, d’ordure, et d’impiété, auxquels les chantres adjoustèrent de la musique agréable aux oreilles, pour faire couler tout plus promptement et agréablement ceste poison jusques au cœur; et plus la verité se manifesta, plus le mensonge et l’orgueil du monde haussa le creste pour vomir ses puantises contre le trône du Fils de Dieu, lequel y a pourveu par sa sagesse et puissance ainsi que du temps d’Ephräim. Et premièrement . . . il a voulu que celui qui avoit été des premiers à publier des chansons folles et lascives, venant à faire comme amende honorable devant tous les fidèles, ait mis heureusement la main à la traduction en vers françois d’une partie des . . . Pseaulmes de David, ayant esté secondé . . . par un autre excellent personnage.” The reference here of course is to Marot and Beza, whose early poems must fall under the same condemnation, and of whose later poems the editor of the ‘Chansonnier’ does not hesitate to say, “On ne sçaurait dire combien ce labeur a fait de fruit, et convertit d’âmes à Dieu, qui par avant ne pensoyent qu’au monde.” And even as the Scottish poet’s ditty “Welcum, Fortoun, welcum againe,” was transformed into the hymn “Welcum, Lord Christ, welcum againe,” so one of Marot’s lighter pieces—

“Adieu amours, adieu gentil corsage,
Adieu ce teint, adieu ces rians yeux,
Je n’ay pas eu de vous grand avantage,
Ung moins aimant aura peut-être micux”— was transformed by a Huguenot poet into—“ Adieu la chair, adieu mondain servage,

 Adieu, vous dy, monde pernicieux,
 Je n'ay pas eu de vous grand avantage,
 Du Seigneur Dieu j'espère beaucoup mieux.”
 —' Le Chansonnier Huguenot du xvi. siècle,' pp. xxxii-xxxvii.

ii. Extract from Dr M'Crie's Note on the influence of Poetry in promoting the Reformation ('Life of Knox,' pp. 324, 325, ed. 1855):—

“ In every Protestant country a metrical version of the Psalms, in the vernacular language, appeared at a very early period. The French version, begun by Clement Marot, and completed by Beza, contributed much to the spread of the Reformation in France. The Psalms were sung by Francis I. and Henry II. and by their courtiers. The Catholics flocked for a time to the assemblies of the Protestants to listen to their psalmody (Bayle, 'Dictionnaire,' art. "Marot," Notes N, O, P). At a later period Cardinal Châstillon proposed to the papal ambassador, as the best method for checking the progress of heresy, that his holiness should authorise some 'good and godly' songs to be sung by the French,—'cantar alcune cose in lingua Francese, le quali pero fossero parole buone et sante, et prima approvate de sua Beatitudine' (Lettres de St Croix : Aymons, ut supra, tom. i. pp. 7, 9, 11). It has been said that there was a Scottish version of the Psalms at a very early period (Dalryell's 'Cursory Remarks,' p. 35).¹ It is more certain that, before the year 1546, a number of the Psalms were translated in metre; for George Wishart sung one of them in the house of Ormiston, on the night in which he was apprehended (Knox, 'Historie,' p. 49). The two lines quoted by Knox answer to the beginning of the second stanza of the fifty-first Psalm, inserted in 'Scottish Poems of the Sixteenth Century,' p. 111 [pp. 119, 120 of this edition]. They were commonly sung in the assemblies of the Protestants, in the year 1556 (Knox, p. 96). John and Robert Wedderburn, brothers to the poet of that name mentioned above, appear to have been the principal translators of them (Cald. MS., i. 108, 109) [History, vol. i. pp. 141-143, Wodrow Society's edition]. The version was not completed; and at the establishment of the Reformation it was supplanted in the churches by the version begun by Sternhold and Hopkins, and finished by the English exiles at Geneva [and others in England and Scotland].

“But the most singular measure adopted for circulating the Reformed opinions in Scotland was the composition of ‘Gude and godly Ballates, changed out of prophaine sanges, for avoyding of sinne and harlotrie.’ John and Robert Wedderburn were the chief authors of this work also (Cald. ut supra; Row’s ‘Hist. of the Kirk,’ p. 4). The title sufficiently indicates their nature and design. The air, the measure, the initial line, or the chorus of the ballads most commonly sung by the people at that time, were transferred to hymns of devotion. Unnatural, indelicate, and gross as this association appears to us, these spiritual songs edified multitudes in that age. We must not think that this originated in any peculiar depravation of taste in our reforming countrymen. Spiritual songs constructed upon the same principle were common in Italy (Roscoe’s ‘Lorenzo de Medici,’ vol. i. p. 309, 4to). At the beginning of the Reformation the very same practice was adopted in Holland as in Scotland. ‘The Protestants first sung in their families and private assemblies the psalms of the noble lord of Nievelte, which he published in 1540, “ut homines ab amatoriiis, haud raro obsœenis, aliisque vanis canticis, quibus omnia in urbibus et vicis personabant, avocaret. Sed quia modulationes vanarum cantionum (alias enim homines non tenebant) adhibuerat,”’ &c. (Gisberti Voetii ‘Politica Ecclesiastica,’ tom. i. p. 534; Amstælod., 1663, 4to). Florimond de Remond objected to the Psalms of Marot, that the airs of some of them were borrowed from vulgar ballads. A Roman Catholic version of the Psalms in Flemish verse, printed at Antwerp by Simon Cock, in 1540, has the first line of a ballad printed at the head of every psalm (Bayle, ‘Dict.,’ art. “Marot,” Note N). The spiritual songs of Colletet, although composed a century after our ‘Godly Ballates,’ were constructed on still more exceptionable models. ‘Et moy, Monsieur,’ says Mons. Jurieu, ‘je vous feray voir, quand il vous plaira, les cantiques spirituels de Colletet imprimés à Paris, chés Antoine de Raflé, avec privilege du Roy, de l’an 1660. Livre curieux, où vous trouverés des Noël’s sur le chant de ce vaudeville infame qui commence, Il faut chanter une histoire de la femme d’un manant, &c., le reste est un conte scandeleux autant qu’il y en ait dans le Satyricon de Petrone. Vous en trouverés un autre sur l’air de ces paroles libertines d’une chanson de l’opéra,—

Un autre sur ce vaudeville impudent,—

“Allés vous Un galant tout nouveau,” &c.

Dès le temps de Henri II. parce que toute la Cour chantoit les Pseaumes de Marot, le Cardinal de Lorraine jugea que, pour arrester un si grand désordre, il seroit très edifiant de faire tourner des odes d'Horace en rime Française, pour nourrir la piété de cette cour si devote.' ('Apologie pour les Réformateurs,' &c., tom. i. 129, 4to; à Rotterdam, 1683.)"

iii. The Glassites, in the last half of last century, seem to have made much more questionable use of this practice than even the Bereans, to whom I have already referred in this Introduction. My friend Mr Hutcheson¹ of Herschel House, Broughty Ferry, informs me that a collection of 'Christian Songs' was published in Dundee—their headquarters—"the tunes of which were mostly those of popular Scottish and English songs, such as 'Roslin Castle,' 'Gilderoy,' 'Bonnie Jean,' 'Logan Water,' 'Gallant Graham,' 'Birks of Invermay,' 'The Flowers of the Forest,' 'The Yellow-haired Laddie,'" &c., &c.; and he gives me as a specimen the first two verses of Song xciii., Rev. xix. 16. Tune, "Carle an' the King comes":—

1. "When the King of Kings comes,
When the King of Kings comes;
We shall have a joyful day,
When the King of Kings comes.
2. We'll see the righteous cause prevail,
And all debates decided well,
And all mouths stopped which lies do tell,
When the King of Kings comes"— and a verse from Song lxxvii., descriptive of the better country to which the Flowers of the Forest have been transplanted:—

"No pains there remaining, nor cause of complaining,
But pleasures unbounded shall flow ever there;
What eye hath not seen, nor our thought can attain,
True, lasting, and glorious beyond all compare."

Mr A. C. Lamb, so well known as a collector of rare books, has since kindly forwarded to me two copies of these Christian Songs, the one, bearing to be the fifth edition, published in Dundee in 1775, and the other, being a later edition, published in 1875, and accompanied with the secular tunes to which the Christian Songs were adapted. For this—the last of many favours, received from him shortly before his so sudden and deeply lamented death—my grateful acknowledgments are due, as are those of all who take an interest in the history of his native city for his magnificent folio with its splendid photogravures of the Quaint and Historic buildings of Dundee and its Neighbourhood.

¹ Mr Hutcheson has found the tune of the secular ballad, "Johne, cum kis me now," in the Panmure MS. of the seventeenth century, but in a sol-fa notation which is not identical with that at present in use.

APPENDIX IV. (p. lxxii).

COVERDALE'S GOOSTLY PSALMES AND SPIRITUALL SONGES.

On 31st May 1884 there appeared in the 'Academy' a letter, by Mr Herford, intimating that he had found that eighteen of Coverdale's hymns were translations from the German, and all of them from hymn books published by 1529. In the number of the 'Academy' for 21st June there followed a letter from Mr Mearns, one of the collaborators of Mr Julian on the 'Dictionary of Hymnology,' intimating that he had found that not only the eighteen enumerated by Mr Herford, but eighteen of the others, could be traced to similar sources, but not identifying them by title or first line, as Mr Herford had done with the first eighteen. In the number for next week there appeared a letter from myself intimating that all, save possibly the last of the forty-one hymns, might be traced to German originals or prototypes; "for Coverdale, like Wedderburn, at times imitates rather than closely translates, merely preserving the stanza and tune, and a certain amount of general resemblance to the original." I expressed my satisfaction to find an Englishman at last calling attention to the origin of Coverdale's hymns, to which, in 1867, I had sought to direct attention, and to express my regret that the editor of the reprint of Coverdale's works for the Parker Society had not adverted to this, even though including, in his biographical sketch, the statement of Bishop Bale that Coverdale had translated into English 'Psalterium Joannis Campensis,' lib. i., and 'Cantiones Wittenbergensium,' lib. i. The first hymn in the collection, which its contents clearly show to have been intended for use before sermon, was one of several hymns to the Holy Spirit, which, as Coverdale mentions in his account of the order of the Church in Denmark and other countries reformed, it was customary to sing before sermon. The nearest approximation to it, both in stanza and contents, on which I have as yet come, is "Ein Gesang vor anfang der Kinder-predig," given in Wackernagel's 'Deutsches Kirchenlied,' vol. iii. No. 674; but various local hymnals of that century contain hymns intended for this purpose which are not included even in Wackernagel's latest collection. The first lines of the subsequent hymns and of their German originals or prototypes were given substantially as below, but the numbers were almost all taken from Wackernagel's earlier edition of 1841, which for long I had used; and here I give them from the later edition of 1870, as that is now more used, though his 'Bibliographie' of 1855 has never yet been reissued, with numbers for the hymns corresponding to those of the later edition of his 'Kirchenlied.'

“This last piece,” I said, “has a resemblance in stanza and ring to the German one I have named, and to several other similar pieces given by Wackernagel; but I regard it as being more of native origin, and having considerable resemblance in form and matter to several of the English satirical ballads of the time of the Reformation.

“Coverdale, as Mr Herford observes, ‘was almost devoid of the lyric faculty’; his translations are generally very prosaic. This, I take it, is the main reason why his book never got hold of his countrymen, or passed, so far as is known, through more than one edition. The Scotch Book was not less fiercely denounced and proscribed; but its author had more lyric faculty, and his work got hold of the hearts of the people, and was prized and guarded by them. It maintained its hold for nearly three-quarters of a century, and passed through several editions. The four best hymns in Coverdale are four which are found also in the Scotch Book—viz., the translation of ‘Herr Christ der einig Gotts Sohn,’ of ‘Ich ruf’ zu dir Herr Ihesu Christ,’ and those of Ps. lxvii. and of the Magnificat. Who was the author of these four translations I do not venture to determine. Possibly both Coverdale and Wedderburn got them from some one else; but, if they came from either, I think Wedderburn has the best claim. Coverdale was not the only exiled Englishman who sought to conciliate the regards of his countrymen to the German hymnology. Some of Robert Wisdom’s Psalms and Hymns are from the German, though, like our author’s, they are rather prosaic. Bishop Cox’s version of Luther’s hymn on the Lord’s Prayer is much more spirited, and held its place longer in the old Scottish as well as in the old English Psalter. Capito’s hymn, ‘Gib fried zu unser zeyt, O Herr,’ was also translated into English [and would seem to have been known in Scotland too, for, with its appropriate tune, it is included in one of the parts of Wood’s MS. book of tunes of 1566, now preserved in the Library of the University of Edinburgh].

“When Coverdale’s book was published is a question still undetermined. In the first edition of Foxe’s ‘Acts and Monuments’ it is included in a list of books said to have been prohibited in 1539; but the list was withdrawn from subsequent editions of the ‘Acts’ published by Foxe. Townsend, in his edition published by Seeley, has restored it, but under the year 1546, to which, from the entry in Bonner’s Register, it is clear that it belonged (see Townsend’s edition of Foxe’s book, vol. v. pp. 565, 566, and Appendix No. xviii.) All that one seems warranted to conclude, therefore, is, that it was published by the year 1546, probably after its author had fled from England [1540], and become teacher and minister at Bergzabern, in the Upper Palatinate. Two or three of the hymns translated by him only make their appearance in [High] German hymn-books between 1539 and 1543, according to Wackernagel [‘Kirchenlied,’ 1541].”

With my letter of June 1884 the correspondence in the ‘Academy’

on the relation of Coverdale's hymns to those of Luther and his contemporaries came to an end. But in his remarkably able and interesting volume of 'Studies on the Literary Relations of England and Germany in the Sixteenth Century,' published in 1886, Mr Herford reverted to the correspondence, in a spirit more jaunty than the circumstances seemed to me to warrant. It needed no formal assurance from him to satisfy me that his conclusions as to the eighteen hymns, enumerated in his letter, were arrived at independently and without any knowledge of my little book of 1867, or even of Mr Laing's more widely known book of 1868. His case in these respects very much resembled my own. For, as mentioned in the introduction to that book, it was only after the text of it had been printed off that I heard incidentally of another little book published in London "by a clergyman,"¹ which (without giving any details save as to Dachstein's cxxxvii. Psalm) stated that the hymns of Luther and his friends were imitated in various countries, and among others in England and Scotland, and that the stanzas in which the hymns and songs of Wedderburn and Coverdale were composed still attested the native country of the original hymns; and it was not till some years later that I became aware that a learned minister of another Scottish Church had, though more hesitatingly, made a similar statement. My investigations were completed before I knew of these things, and my object had been not merely to make a general statement to the same effect, but chiefly to find the several hymns, and to trace out in detail the resemblances between the German, the English, and the Scottish, as shown in them.

In regard to Mr Herford's book, my position was somewhat like his own in regard to mine. It was first brought under my notice by a reference made to it in Professor Jacob's treatise on the 'Lutheran Movement in England during the Reigns of Henry VIII. and Edward VI.,' and I immediately began to peruse it with much interest. By the time it was published Mr Herford had satisfied himself, not only that the eighteen hymns of Coverdale, which he had traced to German originals in 1884, but also all the rest, save five or six, might be traced to similar sources, and that though the German originals had not all been published by 1529, they had all appeared in one or other of the Lutheran hymnals by 1531,² and particularly in the Erfurd't 'Enchiridion' and the 'Walterische Gesangbuch' of that year. He gives a detailed list of them, in which, no doubt inadvertently, he minimises the number I had correctly traced out, and magnifies the slips I had made in that little book of 1867. With it before him he charges as errors of mine, what, so far as errors at all, were those of Wackernagel

in his 'Kirchenlied' of 1841, the only edition which at that date was accessible to students of this subject; and the dates he challenges were expressly taken by me from Wackernagel's volume.¹ He credits me with having been before him in identifying five of the hymns of Coverdale. But if he had perused the book with care, he would have found that not five only, but ten at least,² of Coverdale's hymns had either directly or indirectly been traced in my book to German sources.² He frankly admits that all the others mentioned in my letter of 1884, save five or six, are probably correctly traced by me to their sources; and it was some consolation to me to find that when Mr Mearns's list came to be published in the 'Dictionary of Hymnology' in 1892, it so nearly coincided with my own. Mr Herford somewhat positively affirms that the five or six remaining hymns are either from the Latin or are original. He does not condescend, however, to name more than one of the Latin hymns which might be regarded as the originals, and if the 'Dictionary of Hymnology' seems at p. 227 to coincide, it is only as to this one—viz., "Christe qui lux es." Mr Mearns, however, at p. 443, suggests a German version of it, and Mr Herford himself admits that the English translation was probably not independent of the German version. Of course it was not, for where could Coverdale have got the expression the feynde as the rendering of the Latin hostis but from the der viendt of the German hymn? Just as in another of his hymns his lines, "His owne deare Sonne, and mercy troane," even if they stood alone, would suffice to prove dependence on "Sein lieben Sohn, der gnaden Thron." In regard to some others of these five, my critic confidently pronounces Mitchell's identifications of them to be "untenable." But as to the general question of the derivation of the whole collection, either by translation or by imitation of the stanza and measure, from the German, Mr Leigh Bennet, the author of the article on the "Goostly Psalmes" in the 'Dictionary of Hymnology,' says (p. 442), "It is extremely probable that the whole book is translated from German originals"; and Professor Jacobs, while admitting that he has not been able satisfactorily to identify seven of them, says (p. 124) that "their entire structure and spirit plainly shew where they belong." As to the five which he has not identified, Mr Mearns does not commit himself to more than that the resemblance in the German hymns I have suggested is very slight. But there remains at least the stanza, measure and tune, as Mr Leigh Bennet has said, as well as my own statement that Coverdale at times rather imitates than translates. In answer to Mr Herford's more positive statements of dissent I reply, as to Hymn i., that it contains in gremio unmistakable evidence that it is one of a class very common both in Germany and Denmark in the sixteenth century, entreating from God the Father or the Holy Ghost a special blessing on the preaching of the Word¹; and I challenge him to produce from the whole range of Latin hymnology a hymn containing the slightest resemblance to the following verse, which is found in somewhat similar terms in several of these German hymns sung before the preaching of the Word:—

“ Nowe seyng we are come together,
 To heare the wordes of verite;
 In understandyng be thou guyder,
 That we may folowe the voyce of thé.
 From straunge lernynge, Lorde, kepe us fre,
 That we thorowe them be not begyled:
 Kepe our understandyng undefyled.”

As to Hymn xxxiv., traced by me doubtfully to Kolrose's version of Psalm xxiv., he makes two assertions—1st, That “there is no resemblance” (p. 17). I give the first stanza below as sufficient disproof of this.² 2nd, That it was first published in the Froschover Psalter of 1550 (Wackernagel says 1560), but let that pass, for he will find in Wackernagel's ‘Bibliographie’ of 1855, p. 159, that in the Froschover book of 1540 the first line of a version of this psalm is given in a form which closely resembles Kolrose's.¹ Further, Kolrose's German was but one of two I had suggested as the possible original of Coverdale's version. The other was Knöpken's High German version of the psalm, which in the 'Kirchenlied' of 1541 was given without the author's name, but in the later 'Kirchenlied' was assigned to him, and stated to have first appeared in Schuman's 'Gesangbuch' of 1539, and which has been given also by Mr Mearns. Knöpken, like Coverdale, follows the Vulgate numeration and calls it Psalm xxiv. As to Hymn xxxvii.—that is, Psalm cxlvi. according to the Vulgate notation, cxlvii. according to the Hebrew—a resemblance seems to be admitted by Mr Herford. As to Hymn xxxviii.—that is, Psalm cxxxii. according to the Vulgate notation, cxxxiii. according to the Hebrew—I now find that there were shorter and earlier German versions of it than Huber's, though the latter, if the references to Christ and Christianity are left out, is pretty close to Coverdale's.² Translations of the psalm appeared at an early date both in Danish and Swedish hymn-books, and below I give part of one from the German hymn-book of 1537,³ repeatedly consulted by me in the British Museum. As to Hymn xxv.—that is, Psalm ii.—a specimen of the affinities between it and No. 735—a modified recension of Ludvig Oeler's German version—may be found in the note at p. 256. This now seems to me nearer to Coverdale's than Aberlin's version. With respect to Hymn xli., I admitted in my letter of 1884 that the case was more doubtful. There is no lack of hymns of a similar cast in German besides the two I mentioned, and two or three of them founded on Revelation xviii.; but in the details there is not much resemblance. There seems to me more affinity with some of the productions of William Roy and a rare ballad attributed to William Kethe, though I cannot confidently assert that the latter is of earlier date than Coverdale's. The following is the title of Kethe's ballad as given by Payne Collier in his 'Bibliographical and Critical Account of the rarest Books in the English Language,' vol. i. p. 424: "A Ballet declaringe the fal of the whore of babylon intytuled Tye thy mare tom boye w^t other, and there vnto anexid a prologe to the reders. Apocalyps xviii. Alas, alas that great syty babylon which was clothed in Rayes purpel and skarlet and decked with gold precyous stones and perells for at one howre is her iudgement come and her grate ryches brought to naught" (8vo, B. L., 16 leaves). He has a very verbose and tedious introduction to the "ballet," and when he comes to the latter he begins with the words of the ballad on which it was a parody:—

“Ty the mare, tom boy,” &c.

“This Kethe makes also the burden of his own effusion; but he does not add it at the end of his stanzas, leaving it, as usual, to be supplied by the singer or reader. His first stanza, which, we may be sure, nearly followed the form of the original, is this:—

“Now, good tom, bestirre thee;
This mare loke thou wake her,
And do nothing fere thé,
But boldely go take her:
For some will outwere thé,
Do not now forsake her:
A rope for her beare thé,
That comme thou mayst take her,
And ty her, good tom boy.”

“Comme,” in the second last line, Mr Collier thinks should probably be read “homme,” meaning home. The following is the stanza which he gives from the body of the “ballet” as a specimen of its spirit and contents:—

“O unshamfaste harlot!
So proudly arayed.
In purple and scarlet,
Thou art now dismayed,
Of every varlot.
Thou madeste vs afrayde:
God’s worde, our true marlot,
Hath thé now bewrayed.
Ty the mare, tom boy.”

It seems to me simply impossible, if Coverdale had published this xli. ballad at any time between 1535 and 1539, that his residence in England would any more have been tolerated by the king than that of Roy and Barlow,¹ nor would Cromwell have ventured to employ him as he did. Besides, as I have once and again shown, several of the psalms and one or two of the hymns, versified by him, did not make their appearance in High German hymn-books till 1539. One can hardly suppose he got them immediately on their publication, or made any acquaintance with them till after he went abroad in 1540; nor can one suppose that even then he made a collection of German hymn-books, Low as well as High, but that he found what he wanted in one or two of those used in the district where he had his residence, and therefore in one or two printed not earlier than 1539 - 1540. The

Strassburg Hymn-books, I am assured, were the first used in Würtemberg, as well as throughout the Palatinate. But the Wittenberg Hymn-book seems also to have been used in some of the churches, and I have no doubt he would have access to it also at Wittenberg, where his brother-in-law spent at least two years, and where he himself must have been at times. I therefore still hold decidedly to the later date of the publication of his book, and while holding still also that Wedderburn and he were not rivals but friends, engaged in a common work for the good of their native lands, and possibly even taking common counsel together in the city of their sojourn, I do not care to say more than I have done in the notes (pp. 270, 274) on the hymns they have in common, so far as these are contained in the second division of the 'Gude and Godly Ballates,' much of which cannot with certainty be attributed to the Wedderburns.

And now, in return for the pains Mr Herford has taken in correcting slips and imagined slips in my book of 1867 and letter of 1884, let me suggest a few in his own book worthy of his attention. 1st, In the body of the book (p. 8) the title of Coverdale's poems is correctly given "Goostly Psalmes and Spiritual Songes," but prominent among the addenda and corrigenda (p. xxx) stands the following: "For Goostly Psalmes and Spiritual Songs" read "Goostly Songs and Spiritual Psalms"! This corrigendum certainly needs to be corrected, as he may at once satisfy himself by again consulting either the Parker Society's reprint or the unique copy of the original still preserved in Queen's College, Oxford. 2nd, Of Coverdale's second version of the Creed (p. 14) he affirms that "Coverdale deals successively with the three persons of the Trinity, but Speratus, like the Nicene Creed, with the successive incidents in the life of Christ." This surely should have been "like the Apostles' Creed," of which both Luther's and Speratus's hymns are undoubted versions, and from which Coverdale, like Luther, only so far departs as briefly to assert the supreme divinity of the Son in the second stanza and of the Holy Ghost in the third. 3rd, At p. 18 the Creed is correctly referred to as "das deutsche Patrem," but at p. 400 it is Luther's version of the Lord's Prayer which is so designated, and at p. 12, note 2, Moibanns' version of the Lord's Prayer is similarly designated instead of being called "das Pater" or "Pater noster." 4th, In the same page and note Kolrose's version of Psalm xxv. is referred to as "ad te levavi oculos"—the initial words of another psalm—instead of "ad te levavi animam meam." 5th, At p. 12, note 1, and again at p. 400, Coverdale's correspondence with Huber during the years 1540-48 is referred to, instead of during the period from autumn 1543 to the spring of 1546-47—that is, for three and a half years instead of eight—and it is affirmed to be almost unaccountable that if he had been then engaged in preparing his hymns he should have made no reference to them in this correspondence. But neither is there any reference to the other literary labours in the translation of prose treatises, on which we know, beyond question, he was occupied during these years, as well as during the previous three years of his exile.¹ It is only from the letters of Hilles that we get a glimpse or two of his intense activity at this time, and of the wandering life he led before settling at Bergzabern. It has been usual to say that he spent the years immediately preceding at Tübingen, and received the degree of Doctor of Divinity from the University there in 1542; but the Very Rev. Dr Schmid, "Prelat" of Würtemberg, and first chaplain to the king, has most kindly made inquiries for me at the University authorities, and has been assured that, though the registers of that time are all extant, they contain no entry that he was ever adopted as a Civis of the University or received any degree from it, as his brother-in-law is known to have been admitted at Wittemberg, and promoted to the doctorate there. Comparing his own letter to Bullinger (Remains, p. 502) with a letter of Hilles (Zürich Letters, p. 223), and his own letter to Calvin in 1548 (Remains, p. 525), in which he mentions his having made the acquaintance of Calvin and his wife while still in Strassburg, we get conclusive evidence that in 1541, from July to the end of November, he was in that city and busied in literary work. Where he went next we do not know; but, in all probability, he and his wife accompanied Machabœus and his wife to Denmark before the end of 1542, for in the conclusion of his account of the Order of the Church of Denmark he says that in his account he had written nothing "of uncertainty, but even as I know, and as I have not only seen with mine eyes and heard with mine ears, but been present also long and many a day at the execution, practice, and experience thereof." He could only have been so during the interval between his 1541 visit to Strassburg and his settlement in Bergzabern in the end of 1543. The earnest exhortations he subjoins to his countrymen to avoid all kind of sedition, and to leave off all attempt to reform superstitions, ceremonies, and vain traditions till God should enlighten their rulers as to their duty in such matters, and the complaint he adds, that he had been slandered to the King's Majesty as a perverter of common order, and one that took upon him to change laws, almost lead one to suppose that it may have been one of his early publications in 1541-42 which led to his printer Gough being committed by the Privy Council to the Fleet prison for "pryting and selling sedycyous books," and possibly also that it was the surreptitious publication of his Psalms and Songs which partly gave occasion to the Act of 1543-44, which affirms that "froward and malicious minds, intending to subvert

¹ I understand it is suggested his hymns may have been composed while he was at Zürich in 1534-35; but Zürich was one of the last places at which he was likely to get Wittemberg or any other Gesang books, for at that date there was no singing in the churches there, any more than there was at Geneva in 1536 when Calvin settled in it.

the true exposition of Scripture, have taken upon them by printed ballads, rhymes, &c., subtilly and craftily to instruct his Highness' people, and specially the youth of this his realm untruly. For reformation wherof His Majesty considereth it most requisite to purge his realm of all such books, ballads, rhymes, and songs as be pestiferous and noisome. Therefore, if any printer shall print, give, or deliver any such, he shall suffer for the first time imprisonment for three months and forfeit for every copy £10, and for the second time shall forfeit all his goods and his body be committed to perpetual prison."¹ After 1543 Gough is not known to have printed or published any book; but, according to his latest biographer, he continued a member of the Stationers' Hall Company till 1555-56.

CORRIGENDA.

Delete last sentence of note on p. liii and substitute: "This new version, as stated in 1867 in my 'Wedderburns and their Work' (p. 40, note), is attributed to Robert Pont, who studied first in St Andrews, and afterwards in France, and probably was practising law in the Consistory Court at St Andrews in 1559 when he was elected an elder in the kirk-session at St Andrews. Next year he was one of those at St Andrews found qualified by the General Assembly for preaching and teaching, and seems from that date to have devoted himself to the work of the ministry. He was the only minister who ever got the sanction of the General Assembly to his holding, in conjunction with the office of the ministry, the office of a Senator of the College of Justice. He was repeatedly appointed Moderator of the General Assembly, was intrusted with the visitation of several of the northern provinces, and when in 1601 a proposal was made for a new prose translation of the Bible, he was appointed by the Assembly to take charge of the revision of the metrical psalms."

ADDENDUM.

In Johnson's 'Musical Museum' will be found the tune of the old secular ballad "Ah! my love! leif me not," also that of "My lufe murnis for me, for me," which he, as well as Sibbald, suppose to be the same as that of the plaintive ballad "He's low down, he's in the broom, that's waiting for me"; and Sibbald also thinks that the old song, of which the refrain is "Ye'll never be like our auld gude man," is the original of the religious ballad "For our gude man in heuin dois regne."

A TABLE FOR THE SHYNING OF THE MONE.

Day of her age.	Tyme she slyneth.	Day of her age.	WILLIAM STEWART TO THE READER.
	0 . 48		Beloued reader, I have thought good. aswel for the decoration of this moste singular boke, as for thy profite to adde sōe things vnto the Calender. First I have added the exact houre and minute that the Sone riseth & setteth, almost euerie fyfte day throughout the whole yere calculate to the latitude of Edinburgh, whereof the commoditie is partely declared in one of the canōs folowing, but I wil here teache thee by one example, how thou shalt knowe how long any day or night of the yere is. First marke if at the end of the day appointed, the setting of the Sone be noted, if not, take the nerest marked (the difference can not be great) and double the same, so haste thou the length of thy day, which subtracted from 24. remaineth the length of thy night

night. The same may be done with the number of the Sone rying, but not so easilie. for the operation is double: first thou muste subtract thy Sone rying from 12. so hast thou thy Sone setting or the halfe of thy day which thou must double as before &c. Now wil I illustrat the rule of the Sone setting with one example. The Sone entreth the 12. of June, in the first minute of Cancer, at the end of this day I finde y^e Sone setteth at 8. houres 39. min. which doubled, I finde to be 17. houres 18. min. the iust length of our longest day: now I subtract this from 24 and there resteth 6. houres 42. mi. which is our shortest night in somer, and our shortest day in winter, lyke as thou mayst knowe doubling the Sone setting when he entreth in Capricorne.

Besydes this I have also added the precise day houre and min. of all the changes of the Mone that we shal have for the space of 12. yeares to come, exactlie calculate to the Meridian of the towne foresaid, the practise whereof is this. Seke the golden number of the yeare proposed vnder the tytle of the golden number, & thou shalt finde against it the verie day houre and m. of the change with the letter B. if it be before noon or with A. if it be after noon. For to make the canons more facile, I wil explaine the same with one example. If thou desire to know what day of Nouember we shal haue the change of the Mone. año. 1574. worke thus. First seke the golden number of the yeare proposed, & thou shalt finde it 17 then seke 17. vnder the tytle of the goldē number in the moneth appointed and thou shalt finde it against the 13. day, where against vnder the tytle of change of the Mone is 2. houres 40. min. with this letter A. which signifieth after noon, so haue we change 1574. the 13. of Nouember at two houres & 40. min. after noon (and then shal the Sone be eclipsed :) do so with all others, and thou shal not faile to knowe the exact tyme of the coniunction of Sone and Mone, calculate to our longitude.

A rule to finde out moueable Feastes.

Loke out the Kay of your yeare in the table, then go to the place of the Kalender, to wit, at the 28. of Ianuarie, where ye shal finde a capital L there begine for the finding of Lent, and at the 11. of Marche a capital E where begine for Easter day, & at the 29. of April this letter W where begine for Whitsonday, tell from thēce forwardes so many dayes as the Kaye of that yere is, & where the number endeth, the Sōday following is that Feast. But if it be lepe yere, it is the second Sunday and not the first.

A RVLE TO KNOWE WHEN
the Mone ryseth, & how long she shyneth.

The day of her age being knowen, loke in the Table of her shyning the houres and min. of that night, and adde to the same the going dowre of the Sone, which ye shal finde noted in the Calender (if it be not noted that day you seke, take the next to that day, which is all one) which numbers added, declare till what houre she shyneth. As for example. The 6 day of Ianuary the Mone is 4. dayes olde, the Sone goeth downe that night at 3. houres 41. min. the Mone shyneth as appeareth in the table 3. 12. min. which added, maketh 6. ho. 53. min. which is the tyme she goeth downe at. This serueth till the ful Mone because she shyneth, immediatlie the Sone being set. But after the ful, loke the tyme of the Sones rying (in the Kalender also appearing) & recon so many houres backe from the rying of the Sone, as she shyneth that night, & that shal shew you the tyme she ryseth at.

SONNET.

WILLIAM STEWART

TO THE CHVRCH OF SCOTland. Sonnet.¹

Thou litle church, to whō Christ hath restorede
The cleare lost light of his euāgel pure :
Thy God doth with all diligence procure,
That with his worde, thou maist be stil decorde.

Thogh y^e haue long his wholesome trueth abhorde
Yet his great mercies did thy blindnes cure
Submitting thee, vnto the careful cure,
Of suche pastours, as truely teache his worde.

Out of whose hāds (wth. great thāks) now receiue,
All Dauids Psalmes, set foorth in pleasant verse :
A greater gift of them thou couldst not craue.
Whose endles frute, my pen can not rehearse :
For here thou hast, for euerie accident
That may occurre a doctrine pertinent.

¶ THE PROLOGVE.

PAVLE writand to the Colloss. in his thrid Chap. sayis, let the word of God dwel in zow plenteouslie in all wisdōe, teiching and exhorting zour awin selfis with Psalmes, & hymnis, and spirituall sāgis, quhilkis haue lufe to God & fauouris his word. We haue heir ane plane Text, that the word of God Incessis plenteouslie in vs, be singing of the Psalmes, and spiritual sangis and that speciallic amāg zoung personis, and sic as ar not exercisit in the Scriptures, for thay wil soner consaue the trew word, nor quhen thay heir it sung in Latine, the quhilks thay wait not quhat it is. Bot quhen thay heir it sung into thair vulgar toūg or singis it thame selfis with sweit melodie, then sal thay lufe thair Lord God with hart and minde, and cause them to put away baudrie & vnclene sangis. Prays¹ God. Amen.

¹ The only copy extant of the edition of 1567 unfortunately wants the first two folios. The edition of 1578 reads Pray, but Ed. 1600 reads Prays—i.e., praise; and Ed. 1621, which purports to be corrected after the original edition, reads Praise to God. These several editions will be cited in these notes as A., B., C., D., in the order of their date. C. in line 1 has "wrytand," in line 2 "Lat," in lines 10, 11, "thy," in line 14 "than," for "writand," "let," "thay," "then," and in line 4 omits "awin." D. in line 14 has "wot" instead of "wait," and in line 13 put "into thair vulgar toung" after the words "or singis it them selfis."

¶ Followis the Lordis Supper, as it is writtin in the first Epistill to the Cor. II chap.

¶ That quhilk I haue deliuerit vnto zow, I resauit of the Lord, for y^e Lord Jesus the same nycht, in the quhilk [he]⁵ was betrayit, tuke the breid, brak it, [&] gaif thankis and said. Tak ze, eit ze, [this]⁵ is my body quhilk is brokin for [zow],

I have seen corresponds exactly with these citations. The following from Tyndale's first edition of the New Testament come very near: "Goo therefore and teache all nacions, baptising them in the name of the Father and the Sonne, and the Holy Goost." "Goo ye into all the woorld and preache the gospell (glad tydinges, Ed. 1534) to all creaturs; Whosoever beleveth and is baptised shalbe safe; And whosoever beleveth nott shalbe dampned."

¹ "Not of the dedes of rightewnes which we wrought, but off his mercie he saved us by the fountayne of the newe birth and with the renyunge off the holy Goost, which he shed on us abundantly, thorow Jesus Christ oure saveoure that we once justified by his grace shulde be heyres off eternal lyfe thorowe hope. This is a true sayinge" (Tyndale, 1526).

² So in A.; but B. C. D. rather join this sentence to the one preceding.

³ according to the hope that is trew, C. D. "That we justified bi his grace ben eiris bi hope of everlasting liff a trewe word is" (Wyclif).

⁴ "We are buryed with him by baptism for to deye (in to deeth, Wyclif). That as Christ was rayсед up from deeth by the glory of the father, even so we also shulde walke in a newe lyfe" (Tyndale, 1526).

do ze this in remembrance of me. Efter the same maner also, he tuke the coupe, quhen the supper was done, &¹ said, This coupe is the new Testament in my blude, do this (als oft as ze drink it) in the remembrance of me, for als oft as ze sall eit of this breid, and drink of this coupe, ze sall schaw² the Lordis deith vntill his cuming. Quhairfoir, quha sa euer sal eit of this breid, & drink of this coupe of the Lord vnworthely, salbe gyltie of the body and blude of the Lord. Bot lat euerie man examine him self, and lat him eit of this breid, & drink of this coupe. For he that eitis & drinkis vnworthelie, eitis and drinkis his awin condāpnatioun,³ because he makis na difference of the Lordis body and blude.⁴

¶ Followis the power of binding and loos- ing, grantit to the trew preicheouris of Goddis word.⁵
Mathew xvi. Chap.⁶

¹ Wherever this contraction is used in the edition of 1567, it is retained in this reprint, and where that for m or n is used the italic letter is inserted.

² declair, B.

³ dampnation, B.

⁴ "That which I delyvered unto you I receaved of the lorde. For the lorde Jesus, the same nyght in which he was betrayed, toke breed, and thanked and brake and sayde, Take ye and eate ye : this is my body which is broken for you. This do ye in the remembraunce of me. After the same manner he toke the cup, when sopper was done, sayinge, This cup is the newe Testament in my bloud. This do as oft as ye drynke it in the remembraunce of me. For as often as ye shall eate this breed and drynke this cup ye shall shew the lordes deeth tyll he come. Wherefore whosoever shall eate of this bred or drynke of the cup unworthely shalbe giltie of the body and bloud of the lorde. Let a man therefore examen himsilfe and so let him eate of the breed and drynke of the cup. For he that eateth or drinketh unworthely eateth and drynketh his awn dampnacion, because he maketh no difference of the lordis body" (Tyndale, Ed. 1534).

⁵ granted to the preachers of Gods word, D.

¶ The keys of heuin will I gif¹ vnto the. Quhat sa euer thow sall bind vpon the eird, salbe bound also in heuin, and quhat sa euer thow sall louse vpon the eird, salbe lousit² also in heuin. Quhais Sinnis ze forgeue, ar forgeuin vnto thame, and quhais Sinnis ze retene, ar retenit³ vnto thame.

Of course there are no various readings of this song, which was condemned, and ordered to be deleted out of the end of the Psalme Book, by the General Assembly in 1568, and was so thoroughly suppressed, that it remained quite unknown till the discovery, in 1867, of the copy here reprinted.

I cry in generall, on Spirituall & Temporall,
 This lection that 3e leir :
 Remember alwayis, that fchort be 3our dayis,
 The day of the Lord drawis neir.

That day fall horribill be and eik terribill,
 Quhen that Iuft Iudge fall appear :
 In his birnand Ire, to iudge the warld with fyre,
 The day of the Lord drawis neir.

At ane Trumpet blaft, we fall be all agaft,
 Heuin, hell, eird fall it heir,
 Syne ftand befoir the Iuge, without ony refuge,
 The day of the Lord drawis neir.

We fall giue rekning, of our finfull leuing,
 We haue fpendit in all maneir,
 As we haue deferuit, fa fall we be feruit,
 The day of the Lord drawis neir.

That day the faithfull falbe richt Ioyfull,
 Befoir Chrifft quhen thay compeir,
 Bot the vnfaithfull falbe richt wofull,
 Quhen the Lordis fentence drawis neir.

To vnbeleuaris all this fentence giue he fall,
 With Ire and awfull cheir,
 Pas 3e to the hell, with Deuillis to dwell,
 The heuin 3e fall neuer cum neir.

The Iuft fall all ftand, euin at his richt hand,
 Defendit from all danger,
 To quhome he fall fay, richt fweitley that day,
 The fentence quhilk drawis neir.

Cum heir my Elect, and my awin fweit Sect,
 3our hyre fall not be in weir,
 Baith Saull and body, in heuin Eternallie,
 Thay fall dwell with me richt neir.

Quhairfoir I do call on all men mortall,
 To ryis and be neuer fweir,
 Bot euer bewar of the wofull fnair,
 The day of the Lord drawis neir.

Awalk ay and pray, baith in nicht and day,
 To Chrif, that coft vs all deir,
 To be our mediatour in that feirfull hour,
 Quhen the day of the Lord drawis neir.

APPENDIX II.

NOTES ON THE HYMNS AND SONGS.

P. 1. The Prologue.—This gives in briefest form what is set forth at greater length in the Vorreden of many of the German Gesangbücher, as may be seen from the collection of them appended to Wackernagel's 'Bibliographie.' The concluding sentences in the preface to the Danish 'Psalmebog' of 1530, however, to me seem to approach nearer in expression and meaning to those of this Prologue than any that have struck me in looking over Wackernagel's collection. I give these sentences as translated for me by my good friend the principal librarian of the University of St Andrews:—

“To the end that God's Word and Gospel might thereby be diligently furthered and advanced to us all, as a spiritual comfort; thereby hoping that one result would be, that dissolute, sinful, and indecent impure songs (which are source and ground of much sin and uncleanness) might be put away and suppressed, which are (alas!) now very common, and that children and young people might now instead be won over to learn psalms and spiritual songs, which are a beginning and root of all holiness, virtue, and goodness, and not to sing them merely outwardly with the mouth but also inwardly with the heart, deriving therefrom a good amendment; so that Christ alone might be our song of praise, and that we should know nothing else to sing or speak of than Christ Jesus our Saviour alone. Thereto may God the Father give and grant us all together His grace. Amen.”

It was not only among the common people that such wanton songs as those mentioned in the Prologue were largely patronised, but by the higher classes too; and even at the Court of the Virgin Queen of England, and, Ritson will have it,¹ also at the Court of “the Virgin King Edward Sixth,” they were too much favoured by the courtiers, and he says that one of the reasons of Sternhold being urged to translate the Psalms of David was to counteract the evils resulting from the circulation and singing of the other class of songs.

The various readings of B. and D. given at the foot of the pages were originally taken from Mr Laing's and Sir J. G. Dalzell's reprints, but before the text was printed off the most ample facilities were kindly given me by the authorities of the Advocates' Library for comparing the text of Sir J. G. Dalzell's reprint with the original copy in their Library, and correcting the few slips made in his reprint. It was not till after the text was printed off, and the partial restoration of my health, that I was able to avail myself of Mr Christie Miller's great kindness in allowing his copy of the edition of 1578 to be brought up by Mr Graves to the British Museum, that I might be able carefully to compare with the original the various readings I had taken from Mr Laing's reprint; and, as was to be expected from his well-known care and accuracy, I found but few variations from the original. These will be noticed in this Appendix in connection with the pieces in which they occur. The various readings of C., so far as given in the footnotes to some early sheets of this reprint, were taken mainly from the fragment in St Andrews University Library. The more important of the others were got by me from the copy in the British Museum, and will be mentioned in the notes on the hymns in which they occur. They are chiefly valuable as confirming the readings of one or other of the earlier editions; and I owe much to Mr Graves for the comfort in which I was able to get through a week's hard work in the British Museum.—Pp. 5, 6.

When the early sheets of this volume were printed off in 1894, the only reprint of the sixteenth century English translations of the New Testament in the St Andrews University Library was that contained in Bagster's English Hexapla, and from that the quotations given in the notes, pp. 5, 6, were taken. More recently the reprint of Coverdale's translation of 1535 has been got, and as I find that, though to a large extent it coincides with Tyndale's renderings of the texts quoted, yet in some instances it comes closer to the readings of the Scottish book, I subjoin its version of the texts in question:—

“Go ye youre waye therfore, and teach all nacions, and baptysse them in the name of the father, and of the sonne, and of the holy goost.”—Matt. xxviii. “Go ye youre waye in to all the worlde and preach the gospell unto all creatures. Who so beleueth and is baptysed, shalbe saued: but who so beleueth not, shalbe damned.”—Mark xvi. “Therefore we are buried with him by baptyeme in to death, that, lyke as Christ was raysed vp from the deed by the glory of the father, euen so we also shulde walke in a new life.”—Rom. vi. “Not for y^e deedes of righteousnes which we wroughte, but after his mercy he saued us, by the fountayne of the new byrth and renuyng of the holy goost, which he shed on vs abundauntly thorow Iesus Christ our Sauoure; y^t we beyng made righteous by his grace, shulde be heyres of eternal life accordyng to hope.”—Tit. iii.

“That, which I delyured unto you, receaued I of the Lorde. For the Lorde Iesus, the same nighte in the which he was betrayed, toke the bred, and gaue thankes and brake it, and sayde: Take ye and eate ye, this is my body, which is broken for you. This do in the remembraunce of me. After the same maner also he toke y^e cuppe, whan supper was done and sayde: This cuppe is the new Testament in my bloude, this do (as oft as ye drynke it) in the remembraunce of me. For as oft as ye shal eat of this bred and drynke of this cuppe, ye shal shewe the Lordes death, untill he come. Wherefore who soeuer shal eate off this bred, and drynke of this cuppe of the Lorde unworthely, shalbe giltie of the body and bloude of the Lorde. But let a man examen himselfe, and so let him eate of this bred and drynke of this cuppe. For he, that eateth and drynketh unworthely, eateth and drynketh his awne damnacion, because he maketh no difference of the Lordes body."—I Cor. xi.

"And the keyes of heauen wil I geue unto thé : Whatsoever thou shalt bynde vpon earth, shalbe bounde also in heauen : and whatsoever thou shalt lowse vpon earth shalbe lowsed also in heauen."—Matt. xvi. "Whose synnes soeuer ye remytte, they are remytted unto them : and whose synnes soeuer ye retayne, they are retained."—John xx.

His version of the Lord's Prayer is certainly not followed, O our father, . . . thy wyll be fulfilled, . . . forgeve us our dettes, &c.; nor his version of the Ten Commandments.

P. 7. The ten Commandis.—The stanza and refrain of this hymn are those of Luther's first hymn on the same subject, and probably the "tone" or tune was also the same, as was that too of the Danish and Swedish translations; but in certain details there is closer resemblance to these last than to Luther's original. V. 2 agrees closely with v. 1 of a translation found both in the earliest Danish and Swedish hymn-books¹—

"Med Guds finger ij steen tafler schreffne oc ware paa Sinai bierge udgiffne, giennem then trofaste Mosen."

V. 3. "Wirschip na kynde of Imagerie," again, approaches to Weisse's rendering, "und betrewg dich mit bildern nicht"; while v. 4—

"Tak nocht the name of God in vaine, Bot lat zour talk be nay, and ze,"

¹ I do not mean, however, to assert that John Wedderburn, the poet, any more than Coverdale, was himself a Danish scholar; but his friend and fellow-countryman Macchabæus was so, and I incline on various grounds to the opinion that he was assisting not only Wedderburn but his own brother-in-law Coverdale in their work. He was undoubtedly the ablest and the most thoroughly Protestant of the band of British exiles then at Wittenberg. Luther, who presided at his graduation as D.D., said of him, "Maccabæi pietas et eruditio est tanta ut appareat non humano consilio, sed Dei benignitate, vocatum esse ad munus docendi Evangelium." And identifying perhaps too exclusively the Scots of Scotland with the early Celtic missionaries, he said Germany owed something to them because of what these Scotie missionaries had done for her when her earliest churches were rooted up by the Huns. Melancthon seems to have held the same opinion.

is closely similar to the Swedish ¹—

“Gudz dyra namn misbruka ey,
Dit tal skal wara ia och ney.”

I have not found any close resemblance to v. 5 of the Scottish version. In v. 6, “Honour thy Elderis, and thame supplie,” is similar to Weisse’s German, “Dein eltern halt nach Gott inn ehr,” and to the Danish “Forældre skalt du aere.” In the last two verses the agreement is closer both with Luther’s German version and Weisse’s.

P. 10. The Creed.—This, on the whole, is a pretty close version of Luther’s well-known hymn, “Wir glauben all an eynen Gott,” as even an English reader may ascertain if he will compare it with Miss Winkworth’s modern translation of the same hymn. Still the Danish or Swedish version may have been before the translator when he began each stanza with the words “We trow,” corresponding to their “Vi tro,” and in the two lines—

“He takis cure, baith day and nycht,
To saue vs, throw his godly mycht,” corresponding with—

“Han sorger for oss dag oc nat
For han haffuer alting ij sijn macht.”

The last stanza of the Scottish version has only nine lines, instead of the eleven of the German in that stanza, as well as in the former stanzas. In the reprint I have suggested how the missing lines may be supplied and the sense completed. Miss Winkworth has given an admirable English version of this hymn.—Chorale Book for England, No. 75, ed. 1863.

P. 11. The Lordis Prayer.—This hymn is modelled on Luther’s, and a line here and there is pretty similar, but on the whole it is an imitation rather than a translation of his version. The thought in verses 1, 2, may be an expansion of that in the first four lines of the version of Pollio; the most marked resemblance in stanza 10 is to the corresponding stanza of the version in the Leipsig Psalter of 1537. Bishop Cox’s metrical version of the Lord’s Prayer is at once a pretty close and a spirited rendering of Luther’s, and it held its place both in the Old English and in the Old Scottish Psalter from the first onwards.

P. 14. Of our Baptism.—Luther’s hymn, “Christ unser Herr zum Jordan kam,” is pretty closely followed, but that consists only of seven stanzas, this of ten. Stanzas 3, 9, 10—giving fuller explanations of the effects of the sacrament of baptism—are no doubt original.

P. 16. The Supper of the Lord.—This is a pretty close translation of Luther's "Das Lied S. Johannis Hus gebessert," which is said to have retained the tune of Hus's hymn, "De cæna Domini." Mr Laing gives the Latin of Hus's hymn from an eighteenth-century history published at Nürnberg, Wackernagel in the latest edition of his 'Kirchenlied' (i. p. 218) gives it from a Munich codex of the fifteenth century.¹ This varies from the text given by Mr Laing, and has ten verses like the German and Scotch, instead of nine.

The late Dr Menzies of Hoddam once told me that he had heard the tune of this hymn sung to the well-known Scotch Paraphrase—

" 'Twas on that night, when doomed to know
The eager rage of every foe."

P. 18. Gracis befoir meit or efter.—The first of these I have not succeeded in tracing to any German source. The version of the Lord's Prayer which follows is probably that of Johann Freder, but with him it follows not after this first Grace, but after the one on p. 20, "All creature on the Lord pendis." The second, "We thank our God," &c., is probably from the first stanza of Johann Walther's "Das Gratias," beginning—

"Wir dancken Gott dem Herren."—W., vol. iii. p. 205.

The third appears in more than one form in the German "Die Augen aller creatur," &c. (Wackernagel, vol. iii. p. 223), prefixed to Freder's short version of the Lord's Prayer and Louer's:—

 die von deiner güte habn
 Das wir sie in deinem namen

|--|--|

The last of the Graces, "We thank thé God of thy gudnes," &c., is a translation of the German "O Gott wir dancken deiner Güte" (do., p. 902), of which Nicolas Boie is supposed to have been the author.

P. 21. The Spirituall Sangs proper begin with a confession of sin, which, as I have stated previously (p. xlvii), is a translation of one which had a place in the Danish 'Psalmebog' of 1536, and which still has a place in Swedish hymn-books. I had an impression that I had come on it in an old German hymn-book, but if so, all my efforts to retrace it have been unsuccessful. The Scottish poet extends v. 5 of the original into verses 5, 6. Swedish authorities generally attribute the hymn to Eric XIV.; but this I suppose to refer only to the Swedish translation of it, for the year of his birth was 1533, that is, just three years before the Danish version appeared.

The author of the article on Scandinavian Hymnody in the 'Dictionary of Hymnology,' however, seems to regard him as the author of the hymn of which he gives the first two lines, p. 999:—

"Beklaga aff allt sinne Mä iag men Själa nöd."

But in my Swedish 'Psalmboken' of 1781, Eric XIV.'s name is given to a hymn much nearer to the Danish than the above:—

Danish.	Swedish.
"Beklage aff all mijn synde maa ieg mett Koning Daidt, Ieg kan thet oc befinde mijn Gudt handt war meg wredt."	"Beklaga af alt mit sinne Mä iag med Konung Dawid, Iag kan det ock besinna Min Gud han är mig wredt."

P. 24. Ane Sang of our coruiptit nature.—In German, "Von synde und von dem Lidende Christi." This hymn is said to have been composed or modified by Herman Bonn, superintendent of the Church of Lübeck, and to have appeared first in a Magdeburg hymn-book of 1543. Wackernagel (vol. iii. p. 735) gives it as a four-line stanza, and so also does Mützell (vol. i. p. 312). Koch (vol. i. pp. 434, 435) gives it as an eight-line stanza, as it really is in the Scotch, for lines 3 and 6 should each be divided, line 1 in stanza 1 rhyming with "creature" in line 3, and line 4 with "slain" in line 6. This is all the more remarkable as these lines 'do not rhyme in the original. I subjoin the first stanza of each:—

"Och wy armen synders !
unse missedadt,
dar wy ynne entfangen
und gebaren sint,
Hefft gebracht uns alle
yn solke grote nodt, der wy unterworpen sint
dem ewigen dodt.
Kyrie eleison, Christe eleison,
Kyrie eleison."

"We wratcheit sinnaris pure,
Our sin hes vs forlorne :
Thairin all creature,
consaut is and borne.
Sin hes wrocht vs sic paine,
That we without remeid
Condamnit ar and slaine to hell the deull and deid.
Lord haif mercy on vs, Christ have mercy, &c."

P. 25. Ane sang of the flesche and the Spirit.—A translation of the German "Von dem streyte des fleysches wider den geyst." This last was first published separately at Nürnberg about 1530, under the title of "Der geystlich Buchsbaum," and was repeatedly reprinted. It found a place in several hymn-books from 1541 onwards. Wackernagel (vol. iii. p. 107) ascribes it to Hans Wittztat von Wertheim. Mr Laing refers to Scottish poems of a similar cast which Wedderburn might have found in Henryson and Dunbar; but this is not only of a similar cast with the German of Hans Wittztat, but a pretty close translation of it, as may be seen from the subjoined verse:—

"Nun hörend zu, ir Christen leüt, wie leyb und seel ghenander streyt :
Allhie auff erd in diser zeit hand sie ein statigs kriegen, kains mag vom andern flichen."

P. 28. Of the Croce, and the frute thairof.—This hymn is founded on the last three verses of the 11th chapter of St Matthew, and is a translation of a hymn which has been ascribed to the same author as the preceding one, but which Wackernagel, in the latest edition of his 'Kirchenlied,' attributes to Georg Grünwald, an Anabaptist, who was imprisoned and finally condemned to death and burned for his steadfast adherence to his faith. Mützell (vol. i. pp. 78-80) gives two different recensions of this hymn, Wackernagel (vol. iii. pp. 128-130) gives three separate recensions of it. The first was printed separately in the year 1530, and in the following year it appeared in a Nürnberg hymn-book; the second in Schumann's 'Gesangbuch' of 1539, and the third in the 'Salmingerische Gesangbuch' of 1537, and afterwards in several Strassburg hymn-books. Various changes were made on it when it was adopted into the Lutheran and Strassburg hymn-books. Some of these, especially the placing of what were originally verses 7, 8, after what were at first verses 9, 10, are found in the Scottish translation. Some of the other changes are not found there. Whether this is sufficient to suggest yet another intermediate recension I do not attempt to determine. As I pointed out to Mr Laing in 1867, the last two lines of stanza 9 were transposed in the four old editions of the 'Gude and Godlie Ballates,' but in this reprint they are given in what is manifestly their right order. The German original confirms this:—

"Thocht ane had all this world sa wyde,
With gold and precious stanis of pryde,
Zit he sall die, with dule and pyne."

"Wenn einer hett die gantze welt, silber und gold und alles gelt, noch mus er an den regen."

In line 1, p. 32, "to" should evidently be "do," as it is in the editions of 1600 and 1621.

P. 32. Ane Consolatioun in aduersitie.—I do not remember to have seen either in German or Danish any hymn which could be regarded as the original of this. It is mainly a metrical exposition of Heb. xii.

P. 34. The Forlorne Sonc.—This seems to have appeared first separately in Germany, certainly by 1530,¹ and in 1536 a translation of it appeared in the Swedish 'Psalmboken,' printed at Stockholm in that year. This is shorter than the German and Scottish versions, consisting of twelve stanzas of nine lines each. The German consists of eleven stanzas of fourteen lines each, the Scottish of eighteen of seven lines each.

"Sinnaris vnto my sang advert, Quhilk Christ into his Vangell kend."

"Ihr allerliebsten Christen meyn hört wie Christus redet so feyn."

It appears also to have been translated into English, "Repentance showed by the prodigall childe," f. 87*b*, Stationers' Hall Register. On the other hand, Ritson in his 'Ancient Songs and Ballads' has reprinted (vol. ii. p. 282) "The Prodigal's Resolution"—i.e., his determination to take his pleasure—but that evidently belongs to a later date, after the Restoration of Charles II.

P. 39. The ryche Gluttoun, and pure Lazarus—"Von dem reychen

man und dem armen Lazaro."—This also at first appeared separately in seventeen stanzas, along with a reprint of the previous hymn, and another. It is in the Swedish book of 1536 in eleven stanzas, and in the Scotch it is still further compressed into nine. A shorter version of the parable was also, it seems, published by 1536.¹ The first hymn-book which Wackernagel mentions as containing it was printed in 1545 'Kirchenlied' (vol. iii. pp. 177-180). The following entry in the Register of Stationers' Hall in 1556-57 may refer to an English translation of the Parable, "Of the Rychē man and poor Lazarus," f. 22b.

P. 42. The principall pointis of the Passioun.—The title of the German hymn is "Ein newer reye von Gottes wort zu singen," and the author is stated in the last verse to be Heinrich Müller of Zütphen, who composed it in prison. If, like Grünwald, he was suspected of holding Anabaptist views, he certainly in that verse disavows the political creed of the sect:—

"Recht lasst uns alle bitten
Christum für die Oberkeyt;
Ob wir schon von in lidten gewalt, auch für alle feyndt,
Das in Gott wöl genedig seyn:
hat Heinrich Müller gesungen
in dem gefencknū seyn."

"Pray for all men in generall,
Suppose they wrik vs richt or wrang:
Pray for zour Prince in speciall.
Thocht they be Just or Tyranis strang
Obey; for sa it aucht to be.
In presoun for the veritie,
Ane faithful brother maid this sang."

The Scottish version is pretty close throughout to the German, but its sixth stanza is an addition of the translator. It is said to have appeared separately in 1524, and is found in High as well as Low German hymnals between 1534 and 1539. Of course Henry Müller, not the Scottish translator, as Sir J. G. Dalryell had supposed, was the imprisoned faithful brother.

P. 46. Ane sang of the Euangell.—This is a spirited and pretty faithful translation of Luther's famous hymn, referred to on p. xlvi. It is entitled by him, "Ein dancklied für die höchsten wolthaten, so uns Gott in Christo erzeigt hat." It was one of the most valued and most extensively blest of all his hymns in his own day, containing a clear statement of the way of salvation by grace, and embodying his own experience and that of many who owned him as their spiritual father. "Eyn hübsch Euangelisch gesang," "Ein fein geistlich lied, wie der sündner zur gnade kompt," are the terms applied to it in some of the earlier Lutheran hymnals; and it still holds its place in the hymnals of all the Churches which cleave to his teaching. As already stated, the tune was that of an old secular song he had heard sung, and no doubt was retained to the Scotch version, which adopted also the stanza of the original, but made its seventh line rhyme with the second and fourth, which the German hymn-writers seldom do in this class of hymns. I give below the first stanza of the original and of Miss Winkworth's English version :—

“ Nun frewt euch lieben Christen gemeyn, und last uns frölich spryngen, Das wir getrost und all yun eyn mit lust und liebe syngen, Was Gott an uns gewendet hat, und seine süsse wunder that, gar theur hat ers erworben.”	“ Dear Christian people now rejoice ! Our hearts within us leap, While we, as with one soul and voice, With love and gladness deep, Tell how our God beheld our need, And sing that sweet and wondrous deed, That hath so dearly cost Him.”
---	--

For, on p. 48, l. 19, should be In. The reading die for be in l. 13 is found only in B. The other reading, which is that of C. and D. as well as A., is every way preferable, and is a close rendering of “da bist du selig worden.”

P. 49. Ane sang of the birth of Christ, with the tune of “Baw lula low.”—This is a singularly faithful and happy rendering of Luther's children's hymn for Christmas Eve, “drawn from the second chapter of St Luke's Gospel.” It is said to have been composed by him in 1535 for his little boy Hans, then about five years old. It was widely popular in the sixteenth century, and it is said to be still chanted before daybreak on Christmas morning from the tower or dome of several of the city churches, among which Magdeburg and Dresden have been specially mentioned to me. I subjoin v. 1 in the German and in Miss Winkworth's version, and v. 11 in the German and Scottish as well as in the English version :—

“Vom himel hoch da kom ich her, ich bring euch gute neue mehr, Der guten mehr bring ich so viel, davon ich sagen und singen wil.”	“ From heaven above to earth I come To bear good news to every home, Glad tidings of great joy I bring Whereof I now will say and sing.”

V. 11 is even more happily rendered in the Scottish than in the English version :—

“ Der sammet und die seiden dein Das ist grob hew und windelein, Darauff du Kong so gros und reich her prangst, als wers dein himmel Reich.”	“ The Syk and Sandell thé to eis, Ar hay, and sempill sweilling clais, Quharin thow gloris greitest King, As thow in heuin war in thy Ring.”
--	---

“ For velvet soft and silken stuff
Thou hast but hay and straw so rough,
Whereon, Thou King, so rich and great,
As 'twere thy heaven, art throned in state.”

The tune of Baw lula low.—Ritson in the Dissertation prefixed to his ‘Ancient Songs and Ballads’ (pp. liv-lvi) gives what he supposes to be a fragment of a very ancient carol of the Virgin Mother rocking her cradle, and accompanies it with the music and the lullaby which, as her child softly slept, she sat and sang, "Lully, lullow lully, lullow baw, baw, my barne slepe softly now."

P. 51. To vs is borne a barne of blis.—This is an improved version of a mediæval Christmas hymn, "Ein gesang von der gepürt Christi, den man auff Weinachten singet, gebessert." In his 'Kirchenlied' of 1841 Wackernagel did not trace it back farther than to the Strassburg Psalter of 1539, but in his more recent and much more exhaustive work he traces it back in the Protestant churches to the Zwickau 'Enchiridion' of 1528 and the 'Riga-Kirchenordnung' of 1530, the former giving the High German and the latter the Low, which he thinks is the original (vol. iii. pp. 520, 521). The first verse, indeed, he tells us, belongs to the fifteenth century, and is found in Roman Catholic hymnals of the seventeenth century (vol. ii. p. 525). The second verse in the Scottish translation is not contained in either of the two Protestant German versions, and may possibly have been inserted as a protest against the teaching contained in the second verse of the pre-Reformation hymn. In neither of the two Protestant versions given by Wackernagel are the Latin words, retained in the third verse of the Scottish version—"verbum caro factum est"—found. The Scottish version is a happy rendering of the original, especially in the first and last verses. which I give below:—

“ Ein kindelein so löblich ist uns geboren heute
Von einer Jungfraw seüßerlich
zu trost uns armen leute.
Wer uns das kindelein nicht geborn,
so weren wir allzumal verlorn,
das heyl ist unser alle,
Ey du süsser Jhesu Christ
das du mensch geboren bist,
Behüt uns vor der helle.”

“ Des danck yhm alle Christenheit für solche grosse gute, Und bitte sein barmhertzigkeit,
das er uns fort behüte
Vor falscher ler und falschen wahn, darynn wir han lange zeit gestahn,
er will uns das vergeben,
Gott, vater, son, und heilig geist, wir bitten von dir allermeist,
las uns ym friede leben.”

P. 53. In dulci Jubilo.—One of the most joyous and best-known carols of the mediæval Church, and in that mixture of Latin and vernacular which, under the influence of Henry of Loufenburg and others, became popular in Germany in the century before the Reformation. Wackernagel traces it back to the fifteenth century, and gives four versions of it from MSS. of that date (vol. ii. pp. 483, &c.). The first of these (No. 640) consists of six stanzas, the first three of which are, with slight variations, similar to the text the Scottish poet had before him, and to that followed in some of the earlier Lutheran hymnals; the fourth, which ultimately was transferred into the third place, was not deemed suited for Protestant worship, but at last it too was so altered as to be allowed a place in Lutheran hymnals. I give the verse in both forms:—

“ Mater et filia
 O iungfrau Maria,
 Hettest du uns nicht erworben
 cœlorum gaudia,
 So wer wir all verlorben
 per nostra crimina,
 O quanta gratia !
 O quanta gratia !”

“ O Patris charitas,
 O Nati lenitas,
 Wir weren all verloren
 per nostra crimina,
 So hat er uns erworben
 cœlorum gaudia ;
 Eya wer wir da !
 Eya wer wir da !”

Miss Winkworth in her ‘Christian Singers of Germany’ (pp. 94, 95) gives a translation of it into English, and states that it has been attributed, but erroneously, to Peter Dresdensis, who was rector of Zwickau, and whose chief service in hymnology lay in the strenuous efforts he made to introduce hymns in the vernacular more freely into public worship. He had no doubt, she says, been led to this by his acquaintance with Hus, whose assistant he had been, and one of the distinctive peculiarities of whose followers was their “free use of hymns and prayers in their mother-tongue.” In 1504 these hymns were collected and published—“the first example of a hymn-book, composed of original hymns in the vernacular, to be found in any Western nation,” though somewhat earlier two or three collections of German versions of the Latin hymns and sequences made their appearance.

P. 54. Onlie to God on licht be gloir.—The “Gloria in excelsis Deo” of Nicolaus Hovesch, or Decius, as he has been more usually called. Wackernagel (vol. iii. pp. 565-567) gives four recensions of it. The two first exhibit the Low German forms of the hymn which appeared respectively in the ‘Ghesangk Boek’ of 1526, and Magdeborch ‘Gesangbuche’ of 1534, and which differ, mainly, in that the former gives as the last word of the last line of the third stanza “Amen,” and the latter “armen.” The two earliest High German recensions are those which appeared respectively in the Leyptzick ‘Geistliche Lieder’ of 1539, and in the Augsburg ‘Tenor Concentus Novi’ of 1540.¹ The former contains for the first time the melody to which the hymn has since been usually sung, and the reading “Amen” at the end of the third verse, while the latter has the reading “armen.” The reading “aller,” or “allen,” which has now been generally accepted, has not been found by Wackernagel earlier than 1564, but one would suppose it must have been in existence earlier, for Coverdale’s version is “Graunt us thy mercy altogether” ; and though in the extant editions of the Scotch book “all” is not found, it is needed both to complete the number of feet in the line and the rhyme of this line with that of the fourth line in the stanza, as in the other three strophes, “Lord be mercyfull to us [all].” The fourth line in the last verse has also been left out in the Scottish version, and has been supplied by me in this reprint, as also in my ¹ It is found also in a Magdeburg hymn-book of 1540.

'Wedderburns and their Work' of 1867. Mr Laing also supplied it in somewhat different words in his reprint of 1868, and not only gave Coverdale's version of it at length, as I had done, but also the whole of the original. I must content myself here with inserting the last strophe of the original, and of Coverdale's translation. The former I take from the Leyptzick 'Geistliche Gesänge' of 1539, which I suppose Wedderburn as well as Coverdale to have followed:—

“ O Heiliger Geist, du gröstes gut, du aller heilsampst Tröster,
Furs Teuffels gewalt fort an behüt die Jhesus Christus erlöset, Durch grosse marter und bittern tod, abend all unser iamer und not,
Dazu wir uns verlassen.”

“ O Holy Goost, our comfortoure
In all our trouble and hevynesse,
Defende us all from Sathan's power,
Whome Christ hath bought from wo-fulness;
Kepe our hertes in the veritie,
In oure tentacyon stand us by,
And strength alwaye oure weake bodies.”

P. 55. Of the greit louing and blythnes of Goddis word.—The title of the German hymn, of which the above is a pretty close translation, is “Ein geistlich lied von der krafft Göttlichs wort.” Wackernagel (vol. iii. p. 123) gives two recensions of it—the one from the Erfurt 'Gesangbuch' of 1527, the other from the Erfurt 'Gesangbüchlein' of 1531. The author of the hymn is not yet certainly identified. A separate impression of it is said to have under it the letters A.H.Z.W., which might be read A. Hertzog zu Würtemberg. Both these recensions are arranged in eight stanzas of twelve lines, as is that given by Mützell from the Leyptzig 'Gesangbuch' of 1545; but in his 'Kirchenlied' of 1541 Wackernagel gives it as in eight-lined stanzas,¹ with double rhymes in lines 1, 3, 5, 7. This is the form given to it both in the English version of Coverdale and the Scottish version of this book, the former consisting of seven stanzas and the latter of nine—the second being an insertion of the translator. It is also that followed in the Swedish Psalm-Book of 1536. It is not only a faithful translation of the original, but a very favourable specimen of the poetical merits of the translator, who, as I have already stated (p. lxvi), has managed the double rhymes even more deftly than the author of the hymn. From certain words in v. 3, Mr Laing is inclined to hold that the Scottish version must be of later date than the time of the Wedderburns; but the words in question are substantially in the original, which was published by 1527, and refer to the state of Germany, not to that of Scotland. I give both the German and the Scottish forms:—

“ Das es mit macht
an tag ist bracht, wie klerlich ist vor augen.”

“ Sen throw thy strenth
Thy word at lenth
Is preicht cleir befor our eine.”

¹ This is in the Wittenberg 'Geistliche Lieder,' published by Klug in 1535, which I regard as one remote if not immediate source both of Coverdale's and Wedderburn's Spiritual Songs, and there the hymn has eight stanzas.

P. 57. Nunc dimittis, the prayer of Symeon.—The German title is “Der Lobgesang Simeonis, des Altuaters, Nunc dimittis, Luc. ij.” The hymn first appeared in one of the 1524 editions of Luther’s hymns (‘Geystliche Gesanckbuchleyn’), and the first stanza of it and of a modern English translation of it are given below. The Scotch translation is not very close, save in the first and last verses. The second and fourth lines in the German consist only of four syllables, but in the Scotch of six, in the first, third, and fourth verses, and of eight in the second verse. Miss Winkworth also has six syllables in her translation of these lines :—

“ Myt frid und freud ich far do hin, ynn Gotts wille, Getrost ist myr meyn hertz und sin, sanfft und stille, Wie Gott myr verheyssen hat : der tod ist meyn schlaff worden.”	“ In peace and joy I now depart, According to God’s will ; For full of comfort is my heart, So calm and sweet and still : So doth God his promise keep, And death to me is but a sleep.”

P. 58. Ane sang of the resurrection.—The title of the German hymn is “Christus pro nobis passus est verdütschet,” which clearly implies that the Latin was the original of the German, as it is clearly also of the Scotch version. It is said to have been composed by Herman Bonn, and to have appeared in a Magdeburg hymnal of 1542 or 1543. I gave the Latin hymn in my ‘Wedderburns and their Work’ in 1867, and I here give it again, but from the text in Wacker-nagel’s later ‘Kirchenlied’ (vol. i. No. 476) :—

“ 1. Christus pro nobis passus est, et immolatus agnus est, Effuso suo sanguine in ipsâ crucis arbore, Et mortuus, imperium deicit diabolicum.	2. Nam resurgens ex mortuis victor redit ex inferis, Delevit et chirographum, nobis quod est contrarium, Expoliato Satana, reclusâ cœli janua.
3. Habemus ergo liberum jam nos ad patrem aditum, Per Christum Dei filium pro nobis morti traditum. Alleluia, Alleluia ! Benedicamus Domino.”

The running title at the head of the page is “Christ Jesus gaif him self to die,” and die is also in the first line of the “sang” in editions 1600 and 1621 ; but the editions of 1567 and 1578 read deide and deid, which are required to rhyme with maid in the following line. I have inserted “Jesus” in the first line, both because it is found in the head-line and in the Tabill of Contents (p. 224), and also because it is evidently required to make up the number of feet in the line. For bliss in second last line read blis.

Pp. 59, 61, 62, 63. Certain Ballatis of the Scripture.—Of the four pieces, “Till Christ quhome I am haldin for to lufe,” “Rycht sorelie musing in my mynde,” “Rycht sore opprest I am with panis smart,”

"Allace that same sweit face," I have found no trace in any of the German hymn-books I have examined; and without venturing to assert it too positively, I am inclined to conclude that they are either original, or are derived from some English or Scottish source unknown to me. Whether the second and fourth of them are the songs mentioned in the 'Complaynt of Scotland,' or only spiritual songs modelled on them, can hardly be held as yet determined.

P. 65. I call on thé, Lord Jesu Christ.—This is a translation of a German hymn, of which the title is "Eyn geistlich lied, zu bitten umb glauben, liebe und hoffnung." Wackernagel supposes that it first appeared separately about 1530 (vol. i. p. 392), and was taken into the Erfurt 'Enchiridion' in 1531 (vol. iii. p. 54). The author was Johann Agricola, or, as he is termed in the separate impression of it, Iðn Eyssleben, des Hertzog Hans von Sachsen Prediger,—Eisleben being his native place. The German hymn consists of five stanzas of nine lines each, the Scotch of six with eight lines each. The seventh line of nine syllables is a double-rhyming one, and forms lines seventh and eighth of the German—the former consisting of four and the latter of five syllables. It as well as the English translation contain six stanzas, whereas the German has only five. The inserted stanza is the second. The hymn is one of the four, in the 'Goostly Psalmes and Spirituall Songs' of Coverdale, and in the 'Gude and Godlie Ballatis' of the Wedderburns, which are nearly alike, save in so far as the Yorkshire and Scottish dialects required differences. The Danish version, like the Scotch, is arranged in stanzas of eight lines, but it does not contain the additional stanza found in the latter and in the English version. See 'Danske Psalme-digtning,' 1846, vol. i. p. 133.

Pp. 66, 67. Of mercy zit he passis all.—I have come on nothing akin to this, unless the following entry in Stationers' Hall Register turn out to be so: "Carowl exortyng men to put their trust in Christ alone," f. 118.

Pp. 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 77, 79, 82, 83.—The "Ballatis" and "Carrells" on these pages I have not, save in two or three instances, succeeded in tracing to German or Danish sources; but I am not yet quite without hope that some younger and more patient investigator may be able to trace several more of them. They evidently contain a second cycle of Christmas and Easter hymns. Several of the former seem to me to bear affinity to the stanza and general contents of the hymns of the Bohemian Weisse and Horn on the birth of Christ, as "We suld into remembrance," "The Grace of God appeiris now," and especially "Now lat vs sing with joy and myrth." The carol "Hay Zule [Zule],¹ now sing and mak myrth," changed in the three later editions of the book into "Hay, let us sing and mak greit myrth," has considerable resemblance to a hymn in the Leipsig 'Psalmen und Geistliche Lieder' of 1537, though not exactly in the same stanza :—

“ Lobt Gott O lieben Christen Singet ihm mit Psalmisten ein new fröhlich lied; Macht Gott mitt uns einen ewigen fried.	Der Son Gottes ist nun kommen Hat unser fleisch angenommen Ist hie erschienen uns zu versöhnen und ewige clarheit zu verdienen.
---	--

Er ist kommen uns zu hailen und sein gut mit uns zu thailen,
Uns zu entbinden
Von allen sünden
Wie uns sein Engel fröhlich verkunden.”

Ritson (vol. i. p. 140) gives a Christmas carol with the title and refrain, “Wolcum Yol, wolcum Yol.” In Stationers' Hall Register, under the years 1562-63, is the following entry: “Christenmas Carrols auctorysshed by my Lord of London,” f. 86b.

“Of thingis twa, I pray thé, Lord,” is founded on Agur's prayer in Proverbs, ch. xxx. vv. 7, 8, 9, and bears considerable resemblance to vv. 1, 3, 4, 5 of a German hymn also founded on these verses, and beginning, “Zwey ding, O Herr, ich bitt von dir,” which is No. 466 in Wackernagel's 'Kirchenlied' of 1841; but unless that hymn can be traced considerably farther back than he has done, it must be regarded as posterior to the Scotch.

“Quha can discriue or put in write,” “Gif ze haif rissin from deide agane,” and “Quha suld my mellodie amend,” may possibly be original—at least several poems in that five-lined stanza are found in other Scottish poets of that time. (See religious poems in Bannatyne MS.)

The carol on the conception of Christ, “Lat vs reioyis and sing,” is probably modelled on some old secular “ballate.” “La, la, la,” is the refrain of one of the ballads given by Ritson. Line 1, “Lat vs,” &c., so read C. and D. as well as A., but B. has Let.

P. 85. Heir endis the Spirituall Sangis, and beginnis the Psalmes of David, with vther new plesand Ballatis, as efter followis. Translatit out of Enchiridion Psalmorum to be sung.—Full explanations of the meaning and value of this rubric have been given in the Introduction, pp. xliii.-xlv.

P. 85. Quare fremuerunt gentes. Psalm ij. (“Quhat is the cause, O God omnipotent.”)—There are quite a number of versions of this psalm in the German hymnals of the sixteenth century. Wackernagel, in the third volume of his latest edition, gives no fewer than ten. The earliest version was the abridged one of Öler, which appeared in the Strassburg hymn-book of 1525. The next that of Aberlin. But the favourite one seems to have been that of Andreas Knöpken, which appeared in High German in the Zwickau 'Enchiridion' of 1528, and in Low German—probably its original form—in the 'Rigische

Kirchenordnung' of 1530. Wackernagel gives no fewer than six different recensions of it—three in Low German and three in High. Two of the latter make the first line of each strophe rhyme with the third, which the other four do not, and it is one of these (which appeared in the Erfurt 'Enchiridion' at latest by 1534) that is followed by the Scottish poet, and, like it, consists of eight strophes. The English version of Coverdale I am still satisfied is taken from No. 735, vol. iii. of Wackernagel's K. L., though it has six strophes while the latter has only five. It is said to be a revision of the earlier version of Ludvig Öler, and first appeared in Gutknecht's 'Gesangbuch' of 1827. I subjoin a few lines of each :—

“ Warum thobt doch der heyden hauff die, leuten unnütz, sagen ? . Lass uns zureysen ire bandt von uns werffen ir seyle Aber der in dem himel wont lacht, und verspot ir teyle ; In zorn er mit in reden wirdt sein grym gross schrecken in gebiert.	“ Werfore do the heithen now rage thus Wayne thynges to ymagyn so folyshly ? . They saye, Let us breake up theyr bondes And let us cast their yoke awaye : But he that in heaven hath residence Shall laugh them to scorne and theyr pretence The Lord shall talk with them together In his great anger and wrath truly.
Mein predig das gesatz bezeugt, des mich der herr bescheyden, Gott spricht, mein sun, heudt ich dich zeugt, heysch ich gib dir die heyden Zum erb, und was die welt vermag.”	I will shewe forth the commandement Wherof the Lorde hath sayd to me Thou art my Sonne whome I have sent, This day have I begotten thee ; Axe of me and I shall geve thé soone All heithen in possession Throwout the world wherever they be.”

I subjoin also for comparison with Wedderburn's version the first strophe of Knöpken's, according to No. 142, W. K. L., vol. iii. p. 103 :—

“ Hilff, Gott, wie geht das ymmer zu das alles volck so grymmet ?
Fürsten und könig hond kain ru, mit eins sind sie gesinnet.
Wider zu streben deiner hand, und Christo den du hast gesandt der gantzen welt zu helffen.”

P. 86, l. 23. For teach read teiche, and in p. 87 supply Finis at the end of the Psalm, which, though not in A., is found in B. and C.

P. 88. Saluum me fac. Psalm xj. — So it is numbered in the Vulgate, which in 1524 was followed by Luther, but in the Hebrew and the English Bible it is xii. It is a translation of Luther's "Ach, Gott von himel syhe darein," which Wackernagel calls his third hymn, but it is not nearly so close as that of the second psalm. The original consists of six strophes of seven lines each, but the concluding one is a doxology, which was occasionally omitted in the German, as it is also by the Scottish poet. This psalm also has been translated by Coverdale, and in six strophes like the Scotch version, and on the whole is closer to the original. I subjoin the fifth strophe in each:—

“ And Goddis word and promit Is trewar, cleirar, and mair pure, Than silver seuin tymes purifyit : Sen that thow art in word sa sure, Thow saif vs from sic sort of men, And fra the doctrine that they ken. Eternallie on us tak cure.”	“ Sylver seven tymes tried in the fyre, Is purefid and made deare thcrby, So is God’s word always nearer, When it is persecute cruelly. The Lord’s wordes are pure and ryght And wyll not be kepte downe by myght, But wyll appeare the more planely.”
---	---

Here there can be no question that Coverdale keeps closer to the original than Wedderburn, but it has been suggested that deare in the second line is a misprint for cleare, as the German is lautter, and is correctly rendered by the cleirar of Wedderburn. Whether nearer may not also be a misprint for dearer I leave for others to settle.

P. 89. Usque quo Dominus. Psalm xxij.—This is probably a misprint for xij., which is the number of the psalm in the Vulgate, but it is xij. in the Hebrew. There are at least two German versions of this psalm from the sixteenth century—the one by Matthæus Greiter, which appeared in the Strassburg ‘Kirchenampt,’ published, Wackernagel supposes, in 1524. It consists of three seven-lined stanzas besides the doxology. The other version is by Hans Sachs, and appears to have been published by 1526. It also is in three seven-lined stanzas, but without a doxology. The Scottish translation was probably taken from Greiter’s version, concentrating its three stanzas into two. Line 5 in the first stanza of the Scottish version has been omitted, and I have endeavoured to supply it from the German. The tune is said to be that set to Psalm lxiv., which, like the German version of this psalm, has lines of eight syllables, while the lines of the Scottish versions of both have ten syllables.

P. 90. Domine quis habitabit. Psalm xxiiij.—This evidently is a misprint for xiiij., the number of the psalm in the Vulgate, as xv. is its number in the Hebrew. There are several German versions of it. The two earliest are those of Dachstein and Sachs, the former of which was first published in 1525 and the latter in 1526. They differ but little from each other, both being in three stanzas of seven lines, and the lines of eight syllables, and both following the Hebrew number. The Scottish version expands their contents into four stanzas of seven lines each, and of ten syllables to each line. Like the previous psalm, it is to be sung to the tune of Psalm lxiv. Dachstein’s version is probably the immediate source of the Scottish one, as the concluding lines of the last stanza will show:—

“ Wer dis ding recht halten thut der blibt ewig in sicher hut, mit Gott wirdt er regnieren.”	“ Quhateuer he be, that weill obseruis this, Sall neuer perische, bot Ring in heunnis blis.”
---	---

P. 91. Dominus Regit me. Psalm xxij.—There are two of the German versions of this psalm which present resemblances to the Scottish version. Both, in Wackernagel's K. L. of 1841, were attributed to Meuslin, but by 1870 he had become somewhat doubtful of this, though he admits it is not impossible that the second may be a revision of the first. It is the first, the authorship of which is thus left doubtful, which the Scottish poet follows, though not closely, expanding it into six seven-lined verses, of which I give the last, with the corresponding German below :—

“ Guttes und die barmhertzigkeit lauffen mir nach im leben, Und ich werd bleiben alle zeit
im hauss des Herren eben, Auff erd inn der Christlichen gmayn, und nach dem tode werd ich sein bey Christo meinem Herren.”

“ Thy gudnes and beningnitie
Lat euer be with me thairfoir ;
And quhill I leue vntill I die,
Thow lay thame vp for me in stoir,
That I may haif my dwelling place,
Into thy hous befoir thy face,
To Ring with thé for euer moir.”

Coverdale has given no English version of this psalm, which is all the more remarkable, because he had in 1537 published Luther's Commentary on it. It is numbered by him, after the Vulgate, Psalm xxii, as it is by Luther also.

P. 93. Exultate justi in Domino. Psal. xxxij.—The numbering is according to the Hebrew and English versions, and not, like that of most of the preceding psalms, according to the Vulgate. Wackernagel has given but one metrical version of it—viz., that of Knöpfken, which he says appeared first in the Magdeburg 'Gesangbuch' of 1534, and three years later, with some variations, in the second edition of the 'Rigische Kirchenordnung.' But there must have been others or a High German version of this in the Leipsig and Strassburg Psalters. The Scottish version might possibly be divided into six-lined strophes like the German, but there is no resemblance in details between them ; and in my opinion the Scottish one falls more naturally into couplets which might be sung to some simple chant, and it adheres closely throughout to the prose version of the 'Enchiridion Psalmorum,' and possibly in lines 24, 25, p. 94—

“ The King is not saif be his greit armie, Nor Jyand saif, be strenth of his bodie,”

there may be a reminiscence of the old English version, “A kyng is not helped by his owne greate hoost, nether is a giaunte saved thorow the might of his owne strength.” Mr Laing has followed the reading in D. Gyand, but B. and C. as well as A. have Jyand. In line 5 of the same page, for hail—the reading of A.—Mr Laing has “hant,” while B. has “haue” and C. “haif,” but hail seems to me preferable. On the other hand, in line 19, p. 93, B. and C. read “quhilk” and D. “whilke,” but A. has quhill—i.e., till—which is evidently the better reading.

P. 95. Noli amulari. Psal. xxxvij.—In this as in the two previous psalms the Hebrew numeration is followed. Two German versions are given by Wackernagel (vol. iii. Nos. 59, 537). The former is by Speratus, and appeared in 1527. The latter is by the Anabaptist Hetzer, and appeared in two recensions—the one in the Strassburg ‘Gesangbuch’ of 1530, and the other in the Augsburg book of 1530 or 1531. The Scottish version has no resemblance to either of the German ones, and it is probably modelled on the prose version in the ‘Enchiridion Psalmorum,’ and arranged in couplets to be sung to some simple chant. In the two last lines on p. 98—

“Keip Iustice, and haif E unto the rycht,
That sal mak peace for euer with God of micht,”

we probably have a reminiscence of the old English translation, “Kepe innocency and take hede unto that which is right, for that shall bring a man peace at the last,” or of the Zürich prose translation, from which the old English translation was largely taken, and which has influenced also the last stanza of the metrical version of Speratus:—

“Darnach bewahr
deyn frümkeit wol,
Schaw was auffrichtig ist, folg mir eben,
So wirstu gewahr
deyn frid, die sol
endlich begegnen mit guttem leben.”

Hengstenberg in his Commentary on the Psalms also treated the Hebrew nouns as abstracts; but the current of German criticism since, I am assured, has run strongly in the opposite direction, and like our authorised version has translated them as concretes.

P. 96, l. 2, for “So” read “Sα”; l. 3, “thyne,” A. B., but C. has “thy”; l. 15, Mr Laing follows D. in reading “mansiou,” but B. as well as A. and C. reads “mantiou”; and in p. 97, ll. 22 and 28 “neglect” and “Beggand” with C. D., while B. as well as A. has “nedect” and “Begand.” On p. 98 C. reads in l. 1, liue for leif; l. 5, luffis for luiffis; in l. 9, eirth for eird; and l. 25, flureisch for flureis.

P. 99. Exaudi Deus Orationem Meam. Psal. lxiij. (“Lord advert unto my voce and cry”).—The only version of this psalm given by Wackernagel is that of Burcard Waldis (iii. No. 761), “Herr Gott, mein stim und klag erhör.” He has taken it from a ‘Gesangbuch’ of 1584, in which its title is “Ein gebet und trost-psalm wider die feind.”¹ But it must have been published at the very latest, when his complete Psalter was edited,² and it may even have appeared earlier in some separate form. At any rate there are in the early Psalters of 1537 and 1540 versions not greatly differing from it, and among them one beginning—

“ O Gott, erhör, in meiner klag, mein stimm, und behüt mein leben
 Vor forcht, und in des feinds anschlag.”

The version of Waldis is in five stanzas of seven lines each, and the Scottish version has considerable resemblance to it, in its general contents; but it contains six stanzas of seven lines—the inserted stanza being the fourth, which evidently refers to the harsh measure being then meted out to the author and his friends by the authorities in Scotland:—

“ Quha will delait they will mak na refuse
 Of fa, or fule, and for suspitioun
 They will bring men vnto confusoun?”

Mr Laing for delait has given the reading of D. delay it, but the reading of delayit as one word in B. and C. is probably only another way of spelling delait,¹ which the context shows to be the right reading. On p. 99, l. 19, C. has twa edged for twa-edgait, and in l. 20 giuuis for geuis.

P. 101. Quam bonus Deus Israell. Psal. lxxij.—The only German version of this psalm given by Wackernagel (iii. No. 557) is that of Vogther, which appeared in the Strassburg ‘Kirchenampt’ of 1525, “Gott ist so gut dem Israhel.” It is in thirteen seven-lined stanzas, while the Scottish version is in fourteen four-lined ones. There is not much resemblance between them, and the German is even closer to the old English prose than the Scottish version is. In v. 3, l. 1, C. omits thay, in v. 6, l. 4, it has wysche instead of wusche, in v. 8, l. 1, know for knaw, in v. 9, sonc for sunc, and in v. 11 for leit thow nocht, let thow not.

P. 103. Deus quis similis erit tibi. Psal. lxxxij.—In addition to what I have said on p. liii. and its note on this psalm, I have now to add that it was to the persecuted Protestants in our native land before 1560 what the lxxviii. was to the persecuted Huguenots of France, the xlvi. to the Protestants of Germany, and the cxxiv. to Knox and the Reformed Church after 1560. It went home to their hearts in a way it is difficult for us now to understand, and amidst all their hardships and reverses enabled them to hold fast their confidence that God would yet come to their aid as signally as He did for His Israel of old. It is the only one of these “Dundee Psalms” which may be said to have bequeathed its stanza and tune unto the later Psalter. The intermediate version contained in the Bannatyne MS. (which has now been published in full form by the Hunterian Club) is like this in seven-lined stanzas, and also has several lines much nearer to it than the Knoxian Psalter has; but even the fourteen-lined stanzas of Pont's version, in the latter, bear the same relation to the tune of this version as that of the ten-lined stanzas of the 124th Psalm in Knox's Psalter bears to the tune of Beza's five-lined stanza of the 124th in the Genevan translation. In all the extant editions of the Compendious Buik, save the one now reprinted, the second line of v. 1 is wanting. Mr Laing in 1867 endeavoured to supply the omission from the Bannatyne MS., which gave the meaning but not the rhyme. No version of the psalm is given by Wackernagel, but of course in the complete German Psalters there were from an early date several versions of it, though, as I have previously said, whatever inspiration the Scottish poet may have received from such sources, the working out of the details was all his own. I subjoin that of Burcard Waldis, which comes nearest to the unrestrained utterances of the Scottish poet, and if line 3 of its thirteen-lined stanza was meant, as I think it was, to be repeated, it may also have had some affinity with its tune:—

I.	II.
“ Herr, mach diel. auff und schweig doch nicht, Die harte noth uns ietz anfiht, Drumb sei doch nit so stille :/ Zu helffen uns, Herr auff erwach, Und sih mit gnadem in die sach, Und unser bitt erfulle ; Dein feinde trutzten zorniglich Mit wuten und mit toben, Stolzieren und bochen wider dich, In dein reich dort oben ; Mit list irn rath beschlossen han, Meynen es sol in fehlen nicht, Es muss ubr deine Christen gan.	Sie schreien all Wolher, wolher ! Dass irer keiner bleibe mehr, Vertilget sie auff erden :/ Auff der ketzer falsche lehr Und ires namens ninumer mehr Hinfürt gedacht mög werden, Satan und sein gottlosen hauff, All' geystliche Prelaten, König und Fürsten machen sich auff, Und weltlich Potentaten Han wider dich gemacht ein bund, Dass sie den Evangelion Aussrotten wöllen in einer stund. !

III.

D'rumb, HERR sihe du selbst in die sach,
Ir anschlagg'n zu nichte mach,
Dass sie dein macht erfahren :/
Wie Sisera und Kong Jabin
Bei Kison hast lan nichten hin,
So wöllst sie auch nicht speren,
Mach ir Fürsten wie Salmuna,
Wie Oreb ist geschehen,
Ir haupt-leut wie Seb und Seba
Dass sie dein'n Ernst auch sehen,
Lass ire macht einst untergan,
Und wie du Lot zertraten wirt,
Wie du gestürtzt hast Midian."

In v. 1, l. 1, C. reads kicp for keip; in v. 2, l. 3, Mr Laing reads flycht, but to me B. like A. appears to read slycht, and D. slight;

in v. 3, l. 3, C. reads grie instead of gré, in v. 6, l. 6, contrare for contrair, and in v. 7, l. 6, thay for thy, which last the sense requires.

I add the nine last lines of stanza iv. with the Scottish version opposite :—

“ Last ire macht auch fahren hin Wie stüpfel vor dem winde, Gleich wie ein fewr den wald verbrent, Wie flamm die berg bedecken, Verfolg sie dass sie werd'n zerstreut, Dein g'witter sie erschrecken ; Voll schanden mach ir angesicht, All die dein wort verfolgen wölln Nach deinen will'n, nicht sein ge- richt.”	“ As quheill vnstabil and caffé befor the wind, And as the wod consumit is with fyre ; And as the flame burning, quhair it can find The faggat, in the feild, with greit lmpyre : Sicylke persew thame with thy greuouse Ire, Lat thy tempest thair wraithfulnes re- uenge, And lat thy storme thair pryde in purteth change.”
---	---

It is contained in ‘Der Gantz Psalter, das ist alle Psalmen Davids an der zal 150,’ &c. Zürich, 1537 (No. 1221a, 27, B. Museum).

P. 106. Qui habitat in adiutorio. Psalm lxxxj.—There are three early German versions of this psalm—the first by Meuslin or Mösel, which appeared in the ‘Salmingerische Gesangbuch’ of 1537 (W. K. L., iii. No. 945), the second by Heyden a few years later (do., 604), and the third by Waldis. The second, which is in nine seven-lined stanzas, perhaps comes nearest to the eight eight-lined stanzas of the Scottish poet, but none of them come very near. The earliest Danish version, like the Scottish one, is in eight stanzas of eight lines each, but there is no marked similarity between them. The version of Heyden is said to have been published when Nurnberg was visited by the plague, and it is directed to be sung to the tune of Luther’s Psalm cxxx., which was specially appropriate for such a season.

In v. 2, l. 8, C. has buklair for buklar, in v. 6, l. 8, plage for plaign, and in v. 7, l. 8, knaew for knew.

P. 109. In exitu Israell. Psal. cxij.—Such it is according to the numeration of the Vulgate, and it contains as one continuous psalm what in the numeration of the Hebrew is cxv. as well as cxiv. There is no division between them in A., B., and C. any more than in the Vulgate, though Mr Laing has inserted within brackets an additional heading, and given the two parts the Hebrew numeration. The old Danish version also treats the two psalms as one. In W.’s K. L., iii. No. 910, a German metrical version of the lines against idols is entered as “Ein stück aufs dem cxiii. Psalmens.” “Hie fahend die Hebraer den cxv. an, aber in Vulgat Psalm cxvi. der Hebraer ist Psalmen cxiv. cxv.” The only complete German version given in W.’s K. L. is in vol. iii. Nos. 124, 125, which, however, as first printed at Strassburg in 1525, were one continuous composition, consisting of six stanzas of twelve lines each, with Alleluia, Alleluia, at the end of each stanza. This German version by Greiter in all probability was the source from which the Scottish poet drew, though, if to be divided, his version can only be so into stanzas of four lines. The German confirms the reading of A., B., C. in line 2, barbour—i.e., barbarous—instead of harbour as in D. Mr Laing printed that in his text, but corrected it in his note on the psalm. B., as well as A. and C., reads barbour.

“ Do Israel auss Egipten zoch “ Quhen fra Egipt departit Israell, und do das haus Jacob dannen stoch And Jacobis house fra peple barbour von dissem fremdem volek.” fell.”

In line 4 from the end C. omits thé before loue.

P. 111. Nisi quid Dominus. Psal. cxiiiij.—There were several German versions of this psalm, two of the earliest, and both in three seven-lined stanzas, being those of Luther and Sachs, the former of which appeared in 1524 (W. K. L., iii. No. 27) and the latter in 1527 (do., No. 97). It is that of Hans Sachs, which is translated both by Wedderburn and Coverdale; but the former has expanded his version into four stanzas, while the latter has completed his in three. As to the merits of the two translations I have nothing to add to what I have said at pp. lvii, lviii, where both are given at length.

In v. 2, l. 4, slycht is evidently the right reading, as in Psal. lxxxij., l. 7, p. 104, as is also peirsit in v. 2, l. 6, the other reading perishit being possibly at first a misprint for peirschit. As stated in the notes, p. 111, lines 2 and 3 of the first stanza are transposed in D.

P. 112. De Profundis. Psal. cxxx.—This is a translation of Luther's famous version “Aus tieffer noth schrey ich zu dyr” (W. K. L., iii. Nos. 5, 6). The former is in four seven-lined stanzas, the latter in five. Wedderburn's version is in five stanzas, as is also Coverdale's, but the versions of both are so free that one cannot say with certainty whether they have had both forms of Luther's version before them or only the first.¹ Coverdale's version, as I formerly said, is one of the most favourable specimens of his merits as a hymn-writer. The third verse is especially noteworthy as a happy rendering of the metaphor in the psalm, and more faithfully expressing the meaning of the Hebrew original than his prose version of it, “My soule doth patiently abyde the Lorde from the one mornynge to the other” :—

“ As the watchemen in the mornynge
Stonde lokyng longe desyrously,
That they myght sé the fayre day sprynge;
So wayteth my soul for the Lorde dayly.
Therefore let Israel wayte still,
Until it be the Lorde's wyll
To lowse them from adversité.”

In other respects his metrical version, though in the stanza and to the tune of Luther's, is closer to his own prose version of the psalm than to the German original.

P. 114. Superflumina Babilonis. Psal. cxxxvij.—It is wrongly numbered in A., B., C. as cxxxviiij. The number in the Vulgate is cxxxvj. and in the Hebrew cxxxvij. The Scottish version is pretty close to the German version of Dachstein, but compresses his five stanzas into three. Coverdale translates the whole five; and a specimen of his version as well as of Wedderburn's has been given at p. lviii. Dachstein's German version appeared in the Strassburg 'Kirchenampt' of 1525, and several later German hymns were written in this stanza to the tune of his version of Psalm cxxxvii.

In v. 1, l. 8, while A. and C. read hymne, B. reads Himme; in l. 10, where they have sune, B. has sonne. In v. 2, l. 8, Mr Laing reads glaidness, but B. as well as A. and C. has glaidnes. In v. 3, l. 1, where A. has Idomeis, C. as well as B. has Edomitis.

P. 115. Exaltabo te. Psal. cxliiij.—This is its number in the Vulgate, but its number in the Hebrew is cxlv., and by that number this noble psalm has been better known in Scotland in later times. There were at least two early German versions of the psalm—the one by Dachser, which appeared first in one of the Psalters of 1537 or 1538, probably in the 'Der Gantz Psalter' of 1538, which was edited by himself in the latter year; the other by Waldis, which appeared in the Zürich 'Der Gantz Psalter, Dauid's,' of 1537. The first is not given at all by Wackernagel, but in 1895 I had an opportunity of examining it in the British Museum, and besides a certain amount of similarity between them, I found that it consisted of eleven five-lined stanzas, and that the Scottish version could readily be arranged in eleven four-lined stanzas somewhat corresponding to those of the other. The second, which appeared in the Zürich Psalter of 1537, is only given by Wackernagel (K. L., iii. No. 788) from a 'Gesangbuch' of much later date, and though it has coincidences with the Scottish version, these are not very marked, and its stanza is more unlike to that of the Scottish than is the other. There are a few reminiscences of Wedderburn's version in Craig's version of the same psalm in Knox's Psalter, though its longer lines make it not exactly like, and a good deal of Craig's version has been preserved in the long-metre version of our present metrical Psalter.

In p. 115, l. 15, B. and C. have discryue, and in l. 19, while they agree with A. in inserting of before remembrance, they differ from it and coincide with D. in reading remembrance.

In p. 116, third last line, A. alone has preserved what Mr Laing in his notes admits to be the correct reading—viz., leving men, B., C., and D. having loving in that line as well as in the previous one.

P. 117. Deus venerunt gentes. Psal. lxxix.¹—The psalms before

¹ In B., C., D., however, the number given is lxxvii., as I think it is also in some of the old German hymn-books.

this are all in their regular order. The three which follow are not so, and were it not that we know Psalm li. was in print by 1546 one might suppose they were a later addition. Wackernagel in the 1870 volume of his 'Kirchenlied' gives no fewer than seven German versions of this psalm (Nos. 64, 233, 611, 612, 914, 1122, 1169), most of which, as I have stated (p. liii. note), applying what is said of Israel's troubles to those they were themselves groaning under, and what is said of the heathen, to their religious opponents and oppressors. Even Dieterich in his version (611) seems to do this to a considerable extent, but in his version numbered 612, though it is rather the earlier of the two, he adheres more closely to the text of the psalm. The former consists of nine eight-lined stanzas, the latter of nine in the more favourite German stanza of seven lines. There are nine of these, and though the Scottish version has ten of the same stanzas, it has considerable similarity to this German version, though, as previously stated, its author had also had before him the prose version of the 'Enchiridion Psalmorum' (pp. xlv, lix). He possibly also may have known Spangenberg's version (No. 1122), which, though much shorter than his own, is not without resemblances to it. Notable among paraphrastic translations of the psalm, and adaptation of its contents to the circumstances of Germany in the sixteenth century, is the version of Justus Jonas in fifteen strophes, and his definition of the true Church is every way worthy of a sturdy follower of Luther:—

" Dein heilig Kirche ist nicht Rhom noch seine wüste paffen,
Die Christen Gottes wonung seind, der alles hat geschaffen :
Der höchste heilig Tempel sind die tewren waren Gottes kind,
Durchs wort und geist geboren."

In v. 1, l. 2, C. reads tyrannee; in v. 2, l. 3, seruandes, l. 6, bodies; in v. 3, l. 5, bodies, l. 6, unberyit; in v. 4, l. 7, ramufe yre; in v. 5, l. 3, omits quhilk; in v. 6, l. 5, B. reads ouir; in v. 10, l. 1, Reward. In v. 5, l. 6, B. as well as A. and C. read solpit, and in v. 10, l. 4, Maestic, though in the former case Mr Laing reads follit, and in the latter Majestic. Solpit I take to be the sowlpit of Jamieson's Dictionary and the sowpit of Gavin Douglas, meaning "drenched."

P. 119. Miserere mei Deus. Psal. li.—No German version I have met with has any resemblance to this long paraphrase. The two most noted are those of Hegenwalt and Greiter, both of which were translated by Coverdale, and specimens of both are given by Mr Laing in his Notes (pp. 242, 243). I shall therefore rather give a few specimens of old English versions which have some resemblances in general plan or in some details with the Scottish version, and may possibly have come under the notice of its author. The first of these is "A Paraphrase of the seven Penitential Psalms in Early English," composed early in the fifteenth century, contained in the Sloane MSS., and published in vol. vii. of the Percy Society's Poetry. It places before each stanza the Latin of the Vulgate, of which the Scottish version gives only the first two or three words. The other, which is from one of the volumes of the Early English Text Society, contains poems both from a Lambeth MS. and from several Harleian MSS. I subjoin the first verse of each, as well as some later verbal coincidences with each other and with the Scottish version:—

FROM SEVEN PENITENTIAL PSALMS
IN SLOANE MSS.

Miserere mei Deus, secundum, &c.

Mercy, Lord, I call and crye,
Thi mercy is redy in every place;
Though I have lyved full synfullie
I putte me fully in thi grace.
There is no synne before thi face
So grete as mercy and pyté.
To synful man thou were never sca[r]ce
Of "Ne reminiscaris, Domine."

Averte faciem tuam, &c.

My wycked werkes thou putte away
And fro my synnés turn thi face,
Sorwé and sy3hyng is my pley
Wher ever I be in ony place.

[The thief that hang on thé right hand
And sufferit with thé deide,
In the last hour thy mercy fand.]

—Wedderburn.

Cor mundum crea, &c.

Clense me, Lord ! therfore withinne
A rychtful spiryte in me renew.

To thi mercy I will pursew
With "Ne reminiscaris Domine."

Spiritu Principali confirma me.

Graunt me gladnesse of soulys hele,
Conferme me with thi holy gost.

Sacrificium Deo spiritus contribulatus.

"Ane sacrifice to thé plesand is ane sweit humill hart."

Gyf thou wilt offer to God of hevене
A spyrit of gret repentaunce,
Though thou be gyilty of synnes sevene
A sorrowful herte is Goddys plesaunce.

FROM DITTO IN HARLEIAN MSS.

Miserere mei, Deus.

Mercy, God, of my mysdede !
For thy mercy that mychel ys,
Late thi pité sprynge and sprede,
Off thi mercy that I ne mys.
After gostliche grace I grede,
Good God, thou graunt me this
That I may lyve in love and drede,
And never after do more amys.

Averte faciem tuam.

Fro my synnes turne thi face,
Do all wickednesse away,
Grete is my gult, gritter is thi grace,
And ellis faileth all our fay.

The theves gult hit was forgeyne
On rode when his bones breke.

Cor mundum crea.

God make thou myn hert clene,
And a rightful spirit in me newe.

Spiritu Principali confirma me.

Of thine helth give me the blisse,
And strenthe me with thi spirit cheef.

Sacrificium Deo.

To God hit is a sacryfice
A synful spirit to sorwe sore,
A meke hert [thou] shal noght despise
Whan repentaunce hit wol restore.

Tunc acceptabis sacrificium, &c.

Then sacrifice thou sall accept
Of treuth and rychteousnes.
—Wedderburn.

Tunc acceptabis.

Than shalt thou sacrifice accepte
Of rychtwisenesse and treuthe entere.
—Harleian MSS.

The Scottish version of Psalm li. in the Bannatyne MS. seems also to have been known from some source to Wedderburn, for two or three lines are exactly, or almost exactly, alike, as well as shorter expressions here and there. I subjoin a few stanzas :—

“ 1. Lord God deliver me, allace !
For thy grit mercy rewth and grace,
Soir mornyng, gruffling¹ on my face,
Rew on my miserie.
Als for the multitud and space
Off thy heich clemenss heir my cace,
And my trespass expell and chace ;
Lord God, deliver me.

2. Wesche me,² and mak my sawle serene
Frome all iniquité that bene ;
Clenge me of cryme and mak me clene,
All vycis for to flie.
For my transgressioun haif I sene,
Quhilk tormentis me with tray and tene,
And ay my syn forgan myne ene,
Lord God, deliver me.

BAN. MS.

Heirfoir avart thy visage cleir,
So that my synnis cum not thé neir ;
Off my misdeidis quhilk dois me deir,
Lord God, deliver me.

3. Onlie to thé I did offend,³
May non but thow my miss amend,
As by thy sermondis thow art kend,
Ourcum all contrairie.
In fylth lo ! I begyn and end,
By syn maternall I am send,
With vyce I vaneiss and mon wend ;
Lord God, deliver me.

4. Thow had to veritie sic zeill,
That of thy wisdome did reweill
Incertane hid thingis for my weill,⁴
And laid before myne e.
For when thy fowth of grace I feill,
I salbe clengit clene as steill,
And quhyttar than the snaw gret deill ;
Lord God, deliver me.”

WEDDERBURN.

Fra my sinnis avert thi face,
My wickitnes expell :
Sen I haif hopit in thy grace,
Thow saue me from the hell.

Instead of the “baleful Bellialis bandis” which we have more than once in the ‘Ballatis,’ we have in these English MSS., as well as in the Bannatyne MS., “beleful Bellialis bache.” I am somewhat doubtful whether the reading in A., p. 126, l. 7, is really “conforme,” or as in these English MSS. “conferme.” It is clearly in B. and C. “conforme,” but in D. “confirme,” which from its correspondence with the Latin is probably the true reading. “Ay singand Sanctus sweit.” Such is undoubtedly the reading in A., but B. has “Sanct’s,” C. “with Sanct’s,” and D. “with Sainctes.” The reference is evidently to what is termed the “seraphic hymn,” or “Ter Sanctus,” in the “Te Deum,” and in the communion service of the ancient and medieval Church.¹ Sir David Lyndsay refers to it in his "Dreme."² See notes in Mr Laing's G. G. Ballatis, p. 243, and in his 'Works of Sir David Lyndsay,' vol. i. pp. 232, 233.

C., like B. and D., has hawe throughout instead of haif, and also like B. nicht, richt, &c.

In p. 120, last line, C. has mery instead of mercy, and on p. 121, l. 1, wysche for wusche, l. 11, reinge for regne; on p. 122, l. 8, indgit for jugeit, and l. 11, iudging for jugeing; on p. 123, l. 23, riht for richt; on p. 124, l. 22, thy instead of the; on p. 125, last line, blisse, as has D. also; on p. 126, l. 26, Unto instead of And to; on p. 127, l. 4, I is omitted; on p. 129, l. 11, sche for scho; and on p. 129, l. 23, grettar instead of greitar. B. on p. 123, l. 10, has bruik for bruke; on p. 124, n. 3, read enemeis instead of enemies; on p. 129, l. 23, benefite, not benefice like A. and C.; and l. 26, Sanctis for Sanctus.

In Arber's 'Register of Entries in Stationers' Hall,' the following occurs under the years 1557-58: "The spalme [sic] of Misererery and 'In te, Domine, Speravi,' with the fontayne or well of lyfe."

P. 130. Beati omnes qui timent. Psal. cxxvij.—This is the number of the psalm in the Vulgate, but in the Hebrew it is cxxviii. It was a favourite with the German and Scandinavian hymn-writers. Wackernagel gives three versions of it (K. L., iii. Nos. 8, 602, 783), and the early Danish hymnologists give as many. The two earliest are that of Luther, which appeared in the Erfürdt 'Enchiridion' of 1524, and that of an anonymous poet in the Augsburg 'Enchiridion' of 1527. It is the former which is translated by Wedderburn, but Coverdale has translated both. Luther's version consists of five verses of four lines each, while both Wedderburn and Coverdale have six such verses—the former expanding Luther's second verse into two, and the latter similarly expanding Luther's first verse. No. 602 consists of three strophes of nine lines each, but is so similar to Luther's that Coverdale has been able to a certain extent to use, especially in the first strophe, part of his previous material; but each of the seven-lined strophes of his second hymn corresponds to one of the three nine-lined strophes of the other. There are two lines quite alike in Wedderburn's version and Coverdale's first one—the one in the fifth and the other in the sixth verse:—

"Fra Syone sall the Lord blis thé." "From Sion shall the Lorde blesse thé."
 "Thy childeris childring thou sall sé." "That thy chyldre's chylidren thou shalt sé."

Pleni sunt cœli et terra gloriâ tuâ.

² Makis louing with sound melodious,

Syngand Sanctus rycht wounder ferventlye.

P. 131. For lufe of one, I mak my mone.—Here at length we seem to get into a different atmosphere; and though here and there we meet with a spiritual song as well fitted for use in public or private worship as those which have gone exclusively before, I suppose that these may not have been in the original edition of the book but were added to a subsequent edition, along with at least the first batch of those adaptations of secular songs which were intended not to be used in worship either public or private, but to supplant in the household those “üppigen und schändlichen welt-lieder” which were shamefully common in Britain as well as on the Continent. The song, the first line of which I have given above, may have been an adaptation of some love-song; but if so, only its first line can have been taken over along with the melody. The alternate lines have double rhymes, and perhaps they might be otherwise arranged in stanzas of nine or eighteen lines as the first eighteen are placed under:—

“ For lufe of one, I mak my mone, Rycht secretlie, To Christ J̄esu, that Lord maist trew, For his mercy; Beseiking that fr̄e, grant grace to me, Or I be gone;	And to redres, my heuynes, And all my mone. Or I be deide, send me remeid, For thy pietie, O Lord, quhilk wrocht all thingis of nocht, Grant me thy mercy.”
---	--

L. 5, Beseiking, &c., A. and B. agree in reading as in the text. But C. and D. give different readings, though both agree in preserving the older form of the participle; C. reading “Beseikand that he grant grace to me,” and D. “Beseikand that hee grant mee grace.” The reading of C. seems the preferable one, unless the word “free” were added after “grace” in D.

L. 3 from foot of page, “Sanct Johne did tell, thow heryit hell.” The reference I suppose to be to the medieval tradition, elaborated in the miracle-play entitled “The Harrowing of Hell.” Harrowing, according to Skeat, is there simply another form of harrying—i.e., Scotticè, herying. Editions of the play were published both by Collier and by Halliwell, as also an earlier one from the Auchinleck MS.

In l. 9, C. reads remid for remeid; in l. 10, pitie for pietie; and in l. 12, it once more reads mery for mercy.

P. 132. Quho is at my wundo, quho, quho?—This is no doubt a spiritualising of the old and well-known secular ballad. Two versions of it, along with their melodies and various later references to it, are given in Chappell’s ‘Song and Ballad Music of the Olden Time,’ vol. i. pp. 140-142, but these go back only to the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and the ballad probably existed before her time. In Arber’s print of ‘Register of Entries in Stationers’ Hall’ I find mention (f. 117) of “A Godly new Dyaloge betweene Christe and a synnar meyte for all ages.”

The German Metrical Psalter of 1537 has "Ein gesprech des sünders und Christi." Ritson (p. xcvi) quotes from Beaumont and Fletcher's 'Knight of the Burning Pestle,' not only the verse quoted by Mr Laing from Chappell but the one which follows it:—

" Go from my window, love, go ;	Begone, begone, my juggy, my puggy,
Go from my window, my dear ;	Begone, my love, my dear ;
The wind and the rain	The weather is warm,
Will drive you back again.	"Twill do thee no harm.
You cannot be lodged here.	Thou can'st not be lodged here."

And he adds in a note, "The whole song of which these two stanzas are a fragment is, with some little variation and the original music, preserved in the fourth volume of D'Urfey's 'Pills to purge Melancholy,' 1719. It is also printed at the end of Heywood's 'Rape of Lucrece,' 1620. This is repeated by Chappell."

P. 133. Ll. first and last, ane stranger. In the last as in the first line, C. coincides with A. in reading ane, while D. reads a, as does B. in first line. I think in the last line it reads ane and not any, as Mr Laing has done. In l. 14, I also find that B. coincides with A. in reading thy, though Mr Laing with D. reads my, and note 4 on p. 133 requires to be so far corrected. In l. 16, B., C., and D. all read In, not On as A. ; on p. 134, last line, A. and B. read sa sair, but D. has sa farre. As stated in note 7, p. 134, B. and D. insert chief in l. 16 of that page before excellent, and omit it in l. 17 before gyde, where A. and C. place it.

P. 136. Deus Misereatur. Psal. lxxvii., or, as it is numbered by Luther and Coverdale, lxvi.—It is, like the Danish and Swedish ones, a translation, though by no means so close as they are, of Luther's version, and, like it, is in three strophes of nine lines each. It is one of those pieces which are common to Coverdale and Wedderburn, but with considerable variations, most of which are given by Mr Laing in his notes, and both are given at length in my 'Wedderburns and their Work,' Blackwood & Sons, 1867. It certainly shows several of Coverdale's mannerisms, and a certain dependence on his prose translation of the psalm.

P. 137. In till ane myrthfull Maij morning.—In Arber's 'Register of Entries in Stationers' Hall,' f. 132, mention is made of a "ballate" entitled "All in a garden grene, between ij. louers"; but the song here spiritualised by the Scottish poet is rather that found in the Aberdeen 'Cantus' (but evidently an English song of early date), of which the first stanza is subjoined:—

" Into a mirthfull May morning
 As Phebus up did spring
 I saw a May both fair and gay,
 Most goodly for to see !
 I said to her be kind
 To me that was so pyn'd
 For your love truly."

In l. 3, C. reads walking instead of walkand with A. and B., or waking with D., and in the last v. on p. 138 it reads restorde and restorid instead of restoird with A. B.

P. 139. All my hart ay this is my sang.—One of the songs mentioned in the ‘Complaynt of Scotland’ is “O myne hart, hay this is my sang;” and here probably we have an appropriation of its initial words and melody to a higher use.

In v. 1, C. has mircht for myrth; in v. 2, quhailk for quhilk; in v. 5, bludde for blude; and in last verse, luiffaris for luiffaris with A., or luifaris with B.

P. 140. My lufe murnis for me, for me.—This no doubt was the first line of the old plaintive secular song. It was spiritualised in the pre-Reformation Church, for, along with its tune, it is found in an old music-book printed in 1530 by Wynkyn de Worde (formerly C. 31b, now K. 12, 1, in the British Museum Catalogue). In my ‘Wedderburns and their Work’ I gave it from a copy I had taken in shorthand, but I was not sure that I had in several instances preserved the old spelling. This Mr Graves has most kindly revised for me as under:—

“And I mankynd, haue not in mynd

Who is my loue but God aboue
And on the rode hys precious blode
Whom shold I proue so true of loue,
That king of blys my loue he ys,
The father hys Son from heuyn sent down
The prophesye of Isay
Behold mankynd thy maker most louyng
What ys thy mynd to be so vnkynd,
That virgyns chyld most meke and myld
Hys fathers wyll for to fulfyl
And soffryd deth, as sryptur sayth,
On good fryday, wherefore I say,
Such payne and smart, as in hys hart
Can no man take nor mourning make
The cruel Ieus wold not refuse
And wyth a dart to perce hys hart,
Now Cryst Ihesu of loue most treu
I axe the grace for my trespas
For thy swet name saue me from shame
For Marys sake to the me take, my loue that morneth for me for me.

that born was of Mary,
he shed to make me fre,
so gentyl & curtes as he,
that mornth so sor for mee.
& borne was of a mayd,
fulfylld he and sayd,
for thy loue come to dye [dee],
syth I so mourne for the for the.
alonly for my sake,
he came great payns to take,
that we shuld sauyd be he mournyd sore for me for me.
he suffred¹ for mankynd,
so mekly for hys frend,
to nayel hym to a tre,
thus mournyd he for me.
haue mercy apon me,
that I haue done to the,
and all aduersytye,
and mourn no more for me.”

Iohñ gwynneth.

In v. 2, C. reads aboue for abuse, and in v. 4, from aboue for fra abuse.

P. 141. Tell me now, and in quhat wyse.—If this is an adaptation of a secular ballad, I have not succeeded in tracing it.

P. 142. Magnificat anima mea.—This is another of the pieces common to Wedderburn and Coverdale, though with considerable variations, especially in the third and fourth strophes. Pollio's German version is not so closely followed as is the English prose translation in Coverdale's Bible. I subjoin the third strophe in which Wedderburn and Coverdale diverge farthest from each other :—

WEDDERBURN.	COVERDALE.
He schawis strenth, with his arme potent,	He sheweth strength with his great arme,
Declairis him self to be of power,	Declaryng hymself to be of power,
He scatteris all men of proude intent,	He scatereth the proude to theyr owne harme,
Euin for thair wickit behaviour,	Even with the wicked behavoure
Quhillk regnis in thair hartis everie hour :	Of theyr owne hertes every houre,
He puttis downe the nichtie	He putteth downe the myghtye
From thair hie estait and greit honour,	From theyr bye seate and great honour,
Excelling ¹ them of law degré.	Exaltyng them of lowe degré.

The prose version is as follows: "He sheweth strength with his arm and scateth them that are proude in the ymagination of their hert. He putteth downe the mightie from the seate, and exalteth them of lowe degré. He fylleth the hongrie with good thinges and letteth the riche go empye."

P. 144. Christe qui lux es.—These are the first words of an old Latin hymn of which there are several slightly varying recensions, just as there are several German translations of it with minor variations from each other, both in pre-Reformation and post-Reformation times. I subjoin the Latin from W. K. L., vol. i. No. 121, and the German from vol. iii. No. 645 :—

" 1. Christe qui lux es et dies noctis tenebras detegis, Lucisque lumen crederis, lumen beatum predicans.	" 1. Christe du byst lycht und de dach, du voriagest de düsternysse der nacht, Du werst glöuet des lychtes lycht, du predigest kein ander nicht.
2. Precamur sancte Domine, defende nos in hac nocte, Sit nobis in te requies, quietam noctem tribue.	2. Wy bidden dych vel hyllige Herr, beschutte uns yn dessen nacht geuer, Idt sy uns in dy unse row, ein rowsam nacht vorlen uns du.
3. Ne gravis sonnus irruat, nec hostis nos subripiat, Nec caro, illi consentiens, nos tibi reos statuat.	3. Dat up uns nicht valle sware slap, de viendt uns heymlick nicht eriage, Dat flesche im nicht wyke dorch beger, noch make uns dy tho schuldener.
4. Oculi somnum capiant, cor ad te semper vigilet, Dextera tua protegat famulos, qui te diligunt.	4. Lath ogen nemcn eren slap, dat herte doch alltyd tho wack, Dyne rechter handt stedichlich bewar, de dener de dy leven gar.

¹ So A., B., C., but D. has extolling, which Mr Laing deems preferable, so probably is its reading in l. 1, p. 144, "They thinke," to that of A., B.

The Latin version is said to belong to the seventh century and the doxology to have been added later; the German as given above, after Wackernagel, is from the 'Rigische Kirchenordnung' of 1530, but I suppose there must have been a High German form of it, though it is not given by W. The nearest to the Scottish version among the High German renderings of the hymn seems to me to be that of Dachser (W. K. L., iii. No. 808) beginning, "Das liecht und tag ist uns Christus," which is found in the Augsburg hymn-book of 1530; but some of the medieval versions also come pretty close.

The author of the Scottish version no doubt had before him the Latin original as well as one or other of the German translations, but he has not given the unmistakable proof Coverdale has given that he had both, by translating, as the German versions do, the Latin word hostis in the third verse feynde,¹ not enemies, as the Scottish poet does. His translation is quite independent of Coverdale's save in one line—the first on p. 145, where for Coverdale's "Thy servauntes true that love thé wele," he has "Thy awin seruand, that luiffis thé weill." The singular is the reading in all the editions extant, but his previous line as well as both the Latin and German require the plural, which Coverdale has. In l. 1 of the hymn is a Scotticism (bot and) I have not often met with. It seems still to linger about Dundee, as the following lines from a plaintive ballad recently published in the 'Evening Telegraph' will show:—

" My Jamie's gane afore me—he
 My stey but an' my pride!
 An' oor bairnies three, sae fu' o' glee,
 Been pluckit frae my side;
 An' I am left my leefu' lane
 In my puir biggin' sma',
 To come or stey i' my canny wey,
 An' dream o' fowk awa!"

in reading to, for which A., B., have do; in v. 4, l. 4, it has luffis instead of luiffis with A. and B., and Mr Laing has given its reading; and in v. 7, l. 4, it has moir instead of mair, which the rhyme requires.

P. 145. Christ is the onlie Sone of God.—This is the last of the four hymns common to Coverdale and the Scottish poet, and the variations between their versions are comparatively small. The German hymn from which these versions are taken is attributed to Elizabeth Creutziger, wife of Caspar Creutziger. It appeared in the earliest Low German hymnals, and on that account some have attributed it to Knöpken; but by 1529 or 1531 a High German recension of it had a place among the Wittemberg ‘Geistliche Lieder.’ A so-called improved recension of this High German form appeared considerably later in Leipzig and Dresden ‘Gesangbücher,’ but none of its improvements are found in the English or Scottish versions. These keep closer to the original than is Coverdale’s wont, but there are some notable departures from it. The first is in v. 1, l. 3, “We have in Jesse found the rod,”¹ to which not only is there nothing corresponding, but apparently a reference to Christ’s higher nature, as “aus seyn vatters hertzen entsprossen.” It is in v. 2 that the authoress refers to our Lord’s incarnation and mediatorial work. The hymn is further dislocated by the next notable departure from the original—viz., the transposition of vv. 3 and 4, which rather obscures the authoress’s thought of Christ in both. The only other departure from the original I mention is in v. 4, l. 7, “To thyrst after no mo,” instead of the authoress’s “thirst continually after thee.” No doubt there is Scriptural authority for the other idea in St John iv. 14, but that was not the Scriptural idea the authoress wished to make prominent. I subjoin Miss Winkworth’s translation of stanzas 1, 2, 3 of this beautiful hymn:—

| “ 1. O Thou of God the Father
The true Eternal Son,
Of whom ’tis surely written,
That Thou with Him art one ;
Thou art the bright and Morning Star,
Beyond all other radiance,
Thy glory streams afar. | 2. O let us in Thy knowledge,
And in Thy love increase,
That we in faith be steadfast,
And serve Thee here in peace ;
That so Thy sweetness may be known
To these cold hearts, and lead them
To thirst for Thee alone. |
| 3. Maker of all ! who showest
The Father’s love and might,
In heaven and earth Thou reignest
Of Thine own power and right ;
So rule our hearts and minds that we
Be wholly Thine, and never
May turn aside from Thee.” | |

¹ Referring to Isaiah xi. 1, “There shall come a rod forth of ye kynrede of Jesse.”—Coverdale’s version.

In last stanza, l. 1, C. reads Awake with D., but in l. 3 it reads quhilk with A., B.

P. 147. Christ Jesus is ane A. per C.—This of course should be A per se—i.e., A. by itself, an expression, as Mr Laing states, “applied by the old Scottish poets . . . to denote a person or thing incomparable.” In the alphabet prefixed to the Shorter Catechism in former times the figure & at the conclusion was called by the old people “Apersé” or “Epersé” and.

C. has allane not only in the last line of v. 1, but also in the last line of v. 2, where allone is required by the rhyme, and is found in A., B., D.; and in last line of v. 4 reigne, where A., B. read regne.

P. 147. Allone I weip in greit distres.—This piece is probably meant as a spiritualising of the secular song mentioned in the ‘Complaynt of Scotland,’ or rather an adaptation of its initial line, its stanza, and tune for a higher purpose, as was often done by the contemporary German poets. A ballad was entered in Stationers’ Hall of which the first line was “I weipe for woe, I dye for paine” (Arber’s ‘Register of Entries in Stationers’ Hall,’ f. 131).

P. 148. The Lord sayis I will schaw.—From the refrain so common in English as well as in Scottish poems of this date, one cannot but conclude that this piece, if not of Scottish is of English origin, and in the ‘Register of Entries in Stationers’ Hall’ published by Mr Arber, I find one with the following title: “A godly ballate approvyng by the scriptures that our salvacyon cometh only by Christ.”

In v. 3, l. 2, instead of through B. reads throw and C. throwch; and in v. 6, l. 2, instead of brukkilnes B. and C. read brukilnes.

P. 151. Greuous is my sorrow.—This, or the secular ballad on which it is founded, is mentioned in the ‘Complaynt of Scotland.’ This ballad, it can hardly be doubted, was an English song of the latter part of the fifteenth century, preserved (No. 1584) among the Sloane MSS. in the British Museum, and first printed by Mr Ritson in his ‘Ancient English Songs’ (vol. ii. p. 27, ed. 1829), with the title “The Dying Maiden’s Complaint.” It consists of fourteen stanzas, while this spiritualised version of it consists of twenty-one, and the resemblance is not confined to the first stanza. I place a few of them over against the corresponding stanzas of this gude and godlie ballate:—

“ 1. Grevus is my sorowe,
Both evyne and moro,
Unto myselfe alone
Thus do I make my mowne;
That unkyndnes haith kyllyd me,
And putt me to this payne;
Alas! what remedie
That I cannot refreyne.

“ 1. Greuous is my sorrow,
Baith cuin and morrow,
Unto my selfe allone;
Thus Christ makis his mone,
Saying, Vnkyndnes hes killit me,
And put me to this paine;
Allace! quhat remedie,
For I wald nocht refraine.

6. Iff ony wyght be here,
That byeth love so dere.

8. My last wyll here I make
To God my soule I betake,
And my wrechyd body,
As erth, in a hole to lie.

9. O harte I thé bequyeth
To hyme that is my deth,
Yff that no harte haith he
My harte his shall be.

12. My tombe ytt schal be blewe,
In tokyne that I was trewe,
To brynge my love from doute,
It shal be wryttynge abowtte
That unkyndnes haith kyllyd me,
And putt me to this payne.

11. Now I besych all ye,
Namely, that lovers be,
My love my deth forgyve,
And soffer hyme to lyve:
Thought unkyndnes haith kylled me
And putt me to this payne,
Yett haid I rether dye
For his sake ons agayne."

12. Geue ony ane be heir,
That will by lufe sa deir.

16. My Saule in thy handis fré,
My last will sall be,
O Father I commit,
Into thy handis my spreit.

18. Go, hart, I thé bequyeth
To hir that was my deith,
Mannis Saule is scho trewlie,
My hart hir hart sall be,
Thocht scho maist unkyndlie slew me.

20. My Tumble is fresch and new,
In sauing I was trew,
To put mankynde fra dout,
Thair sall be writtin about,
The Jewis King heir dois ly,
Quhome unkyndnes hes slaine.

21. O Father Imperiall,
I pray thé in speciall,
My deith mannis Saule forgeue,
In heuin with me to leue,
Thocht vnkyndlie scho keillit me,
I wald scho had na paine:
For I had leuer die,
For hir saik anis agayne."

Arber gives among entries in the 'Register of Stationers' Hall,' f. 84^b, "The Lamentation of Christe for man," which may possibly have been an adaptation of the same ballad.¹ On p. 151, l. 8, C. reads

¹ At any rate the following has some affinity to it, and still more to that given on p. 271, though tainted throughout with the medieval notion that the Virgin Mother is more tender and compassionate than her divine Son:—

Cryste.

"Rycht & no wrong it is among
Yt I of man complayne,
Affyrmyng this howe that it is
A labour spent in vayne,
To loue him well, for never a dell
He wyll me loue agayne;
For though that I me sore applye
His fauer to attayne,
Yet yf that shrewe to hym pursue,
That clepyd is Sathan,
Hym to conuert, sone from his hert
I am a banysshed man."

Maria the Mayde.

"I say not naye both nyght & daye,
Swete sonne as ye haue sayde
Man is unkynde, hys faythfull mynde
In maner is half decayed;
But neuer the lesse through rightwysenes
Theyrwith be not afrayed;
Yet mercy trewe must contynewe,
And not aparte be layed;
Syth ye from loue came from aboue
Frome your father in trone,
Of louynge mynde to warde mankynde
To dye for hym alone."
—Percy Society, Early Poetry, vol. vi.

And in the same strain of dialogue it continues for twenty pages.

keillit, and in l. 10 remidie; on p. 152, l. 12, it concurs with A., D. in reading nor, where B. has not, and in l. 14 it reads sich, as B. also does; on p. 153, l. 2, C. reads scourgis and stang instead of strang, in l. 11 it reads theiffis, and l. 12 greiuis; on p. 154, l. 2, keillit, l. 10, dois keill, l. 11, puttis me to greit paine; on p. 155, l. 1, vyllyny, where A., B. have vyllynie; on p. 156, l. 18, merely for merilie, and l. 25, now for new.

P. 158. Iohne, cum kis me now.—The earliest appearance of this widely known ballad is said to be in Queen Elizabeth's 'Virginal Book.' Chappell, in vol. i. pp. 147, 148, gives it and its tune, and mentions various later books in which it is contained or in which allusions to it occur. He says that it has been claimed as Scottish on account of the use made of it in this early compendium of "Gude and Godlie Ballates" (and this is at least sufficient to show that it must be of earlier date than Elizabeth's time), but he maintains that it has no distinctively Scottish character, and that no old Scottish copy of it has hitherto been discovered. A copy of the tune in some sol-fa form of musical notation has recently been brought to light by my friend Alex. Hutcheson, Esq. of Herschell House, Broughty Ferry, from a collection of psalms and songs and tunes found in a MS. in the library at Panmure House, which is supposed to date from the close of the seventeenth century; but even this is more than a century too late. The words of the song are not contained in the MS. Nor are they, save the first line, given by Chappell along with the tune. This line is—

He gives the first three verses of the "godlie ballad," and states that the tune was extremely popular as dance music, of which he gives several illustrations from authors of the seventeenth century. Perhaps the satirical ballad, of which the first lines are given by Knox, and said by him to be the song of triumph over the taking of St Andrews castle, was meant to be sung to the same tune :—

" Preasts content you now, [now, now]
Preasts content you now,
For Normond and his cumpany
Hes filled the galayis fow."

In vol. iii. p. 365 of Henley and Henderson's edition of Burns, in a note on that poet's adaptation of the old song, the following fragment of an older version found in Herd is given :—

" John, come kiss me now, now, now !	Some will court and compliment,
O John, come kiss me now !	And make a great ado,
John come kiss me by and bye,	Some will make of their guidman,
And mak nae mair ado.	And sae will I of you."

An old copy of the husband's answer to the above song, found in a

MS. in the library of Trinity College, Dublin, was printed by Andrew Lang, Esq., in 'Longman's Magazine' for November 1895 (pp. 107, 108), and with his kind permission is here inserted:—

"JON COM KISSE ME NOW.

'Jon come kisse me now now, Jon come kisse me now,
Jon come kisse me by and by, and mak no mor adow.'

His answer to y^t sam toon.

'Peace I'm angrie now now, peace I'm angrie now,
Peace I'm angrie at the hert, and knowe not q^t to dow.

Wyfs can faine and wyfs can flatter: heav I not hit them now,
When once they beynn they still doe chatter, and so does my wyf too.

Wyfs ar good and wyfs ar bad: heav I not hit, &c.
Wyfs can make ther husbands mad, and so does my, &c.

Wyfs can sport and wyfs can play: heav I not hit, &c.
And w^t little work passe ower the day, and so does my, &c.

And wyfs hes many fair words and looks: heav I not, &c.
And draws sillie men on folie's hooks, and so did my wyfe too.

Wyfs will not ther meeting misse: heav I not, &c.
A cowp of seck they can well kisse, and so can, &c.

Wyfs can dance and wyfs can lowp: heav I not, &c.
Wyfs can toome the full wyne stowp, and so can, &c.

Wyfs can ban and wyfs can curse: heav I not, &c.
Wyfs can toome ther husbands purse, and so can, &c.

Wyfs can flyte and wyfs can scold: heav I not, &c.
Wyfs of ther tounge they heav no hold, and nane hes my wyf too.

Wyfs they'r good then at no tym, neither is my wyf now,
Except it be in drinking wyn, and so is my wyf too.

Some they be right needful evils, so is my, &c.
Wyfs are nothing else but divles, and so is, &c.

Now of my song I make ane end, lo heir I quyt the now,
All evill wyfs to the divle I send, amongst them my wyf too.

Peace I'm angrie now, now, peace I'm angrie now,
Peace I'm angrie at the hert, and cannot tell q^t to dowe.'"

On p. 158, l. 19, creatures should be creaturis, but C. reads creatouris; in l. 29, Of pure lufe is undoubtedly the true reading, but B., C., D. all read O pure lyfe; on p. 159, l. 3, A., B., C. all read attencment, for which Mr Laing reads with D. attonement; C. in l. 5, reads death for deith, in l. 16, hier for heir, and in l. 22, sought for socht; on p. 160, l. 5, thow did for did thow, and in l. 6, seking for seiking; in l. 21, B. reads Preicheouris not preichours, and in l. 26, Ey, not eye. On p. 161, C. reads in l. 5, suddantly, and in l. 11, ciect for reiect.

P. 161. In te Domine Speraui. Psal. xxxj.—The only German version of this given by Wackernagel is that of Reusuer, which appears in the 'Form und ordnung Geystlicher Gesang und Psalmen,' Augsburg, 1533. The Scottish version has some general resemblance to it, but has not the same form of stanza, nor can it be sung to the same tune. A close and spirited translation of Reusuer's version, and adapted to its tune, has been given by Miss Winkworth, and I subjoin some verses of it:—

- | | |
|---|--|
| “1. In the Lord have I put my trust,
Leave me not helpless in the dust,
Let not my hope be put to shame
But still sustain, thro' want and pain,
My faith that thou art aye the same. | 5. The world for me hath falsely set
Full many a secret snare and net,
Dark lies, delusions sweet and vain;
Lord hear my prayers, and break these snares,
And make my path before me plain. |
| 2. Incline a gracious ear to me,
And hear the prayers I raise to thee,
Show forth thy power and haste to save!
For woes and fear surround me here,
Oh swiftly send th' help I crave! | 6. With thee, Lord, would I cast my lot;
My God, my God, forsake me not,
O faithful God, for I commend
My soul to thee; deliver me
Both now, and when this life shall end.” |

On p. 162, l. 10, B. reads hyde, C. hyd for hyde. In note 6, the reading of defendar for defence in l. 12 is attributed to B. instead of to D. “Bailfull Balialis bandis” occurs in l. 15, and again on p. 168, l. 23.

P. 162. Go, hart, vnto the lampe of lycht.—In v. 4, l. 1, the reading should evidently be full meik as in D., but full is wanting in A., B., C.; in l. 3, D. reads hailth is for all flesh, while A., B., C. read heill is for all seik, and rightly so; in l. 4, B. seems to read my Saviour, while A., C., D. read thy Saviour, which the sense requires.

P. 163. Our brother lat vs put in graue.—I deem it unnecessary to repeat here what I have already said, pp. xxxvii, xxxviii, regarding one of the most cherished of the hymns translated or composed by Michael Weisse, pastor at Landskron and Fulnek. The foundation of his collection was the old hymns of the Bohemian and Moravian Brethren, which he translated into German and combined with a number of beautiful hymns composed by himself.¹ Wackernagel mentions three editions of the collection, which were published in 1531, 1544, and 1566, K. L., iii, p. 229; but a number of the hymns were early adopted with slight alterations into the Lutheran hymnals (do., 332), and this one was not only appropriated and treasured by the Germans, but early passed from them to the Danes and the Swedes as well as to the Scotch, and in our own day Miss Winkworth has given a very beautiful version of it to the English. It originally contained only seven verses, but an eighth verse, attributed by some to Luther,¹ was added in a Magdeburg hymnal of 1540, and soon was generally adopted both in Germany and Scandinavia. When and why the four additional verses, which hold a place in the Scottish version between the seventh and eighth of the German, were inserted, I have explained in the Introduction. I subjoin the German and English versions of this favourite hymn:—

daran wir kein zweifel haben,
Er werd am Jüngsten tag aufstehen,
und unverweslich herfür gehn. | “ 1. Now lay we calmly in the grave
This form, whereof no doubt we have,
That it shall rise again that day,
In glorious triumph o'er decay. |
| 2. Erd ist er, und von der erden, wird auch zu erd wider werden,
Und von der erd wider aufstehen,
wen er Gottes Posaun wird angehn. | 2. And so to earth again we trust
What came from dust, and turns to dust,
And from the dust shall surely rise,
When the last trumpet fills the skies. |
| 3. Sein seel lebet ewig in Gott, der sie alhie aus lauter gnad,
Von aller sund und missethat,

Whose grace his pardon hath bestowed,
Who through His Son redeemed him here,
From bondage unto sin and fear. |

A blessed end is his at last,
He bore Christ's yoke and did His will,
And though he died he liveth still. |

And calmly shall this body sleep,
Till God shall Death himself destroy,
And raise it unto glorious joy. |
| 6. Hie ist er in angst gewesen,

In ewiger freud und wonne,
leuchten wie die helle Sonne. | 6. He suffered pain and grief below,
Christ heals him now from all his woe;
For him hath endless joy begun,
He shines in glory like the sun. |
| 7. Nun lassen wir ihn hie schlaffen, und gehen all heim unser strassen,
Schicken uns auch mit allem fleiss
denn der todt kömpt uns gleicher weiss. | 7. Then let us leave him to his rest,
And homeward turn, for he is blest,
And we must well our souls prepare,
When death shall come, to meet him there. |

In v. 1, ll. 1, 2, C. coincides with A. in reading lat for let; in v. 3, l. 3, it coincides with B. in reading caus for cause; in v. 4, l. 4, it reads liuand for leuand; in v. 9, l. 1, it reads preuent, as also does B., but in reprint of it this has been corrected; and in v. 11, l. 1, it reads and for end. In v. 7, l. 4, approachis should be approchis.

P. 165. Musing greittie in my mynde.—This piece is in all probability an adaptation of a secular ballad. The refrain in the same or kindred words is well known in that connection, and there may possibly have been a similar adaptation of the secular ballad at a somewhat earlier date in England than in Scotland; for, according to the 'Register of Entries in Stationers' Hall,' a ballad intituled "The lamentation of the mesyrye of mankynde" was repeatedly printed in the early years of Elizabeth's reign. See Arber's 'Transcript,' ff. 74. Chappell (p. 59) gives in connection with a very old song the refrain, "Down-a-down, hey down, hey down," varied by "With a down, derry, derry, derry down."

In v. 2, l. 2, C. reads gratious where A., B. have gracious; in v. 3, l. 3, fude where A., B. have fuid; in v. 5, l. 3, climmiis where they have clymmis; and in v. 7, l. 1, Empriour where they have Empreour.

P. 167. Pray God for grace, my lufe maist deir.—In v. 1, l. 1, dear is a misprint for deir. In v. 3, l. 2, C. reads asperance instead of esperance, and in l. 3, receauue instead of ressauue; in v. 4, l. 3, repoons for repoons; and in v. 5, l. 1, olney for onely or onlie, as in A., B.

P. 168. Dozane be zone Riuer I ran.—The first stanza of this piece has only five lines, while all the others have six. No doubt, as in several previous instances, a line has dropped out—viz., the third in the stanza—which in the others rhymes with l. 6. The ballad I take to be an adaptation of a secular love ballad, as were so many of the same sort in Germany in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries.

In v. 1, l. 1, C. reads zon for zone, and in l. 4 boght for brocht, which A., B. have; in vv. 2, 3, luif thrice for lufe, as in A., B.; in v. 3, l. 5, persit where A., B. have peirsit; and in v. 6, l. 4, prais where they have pryse.

P. 170. With heuie hart full of distres.—This also is, no doubt, an adaptation of the stanza, tune, and initial words of a secular ballad. Mr Laing states in his notes on it (pp. 221, 254) that it is one of those which, so far as preserved, were copied for him by the late Rev. Dr Hugh Scott from the fly-leaves of an early volume of the records of the kirk-session of Inverness (1604-1616). I have made all possible inquiries after the volume, but I am informed that it has never been in the possession of the present session-clerk, and that neither he nor Dr Norman Macleod know what has become of it. Only the first seven verses were preserved in the fragment. The various readings he has given differ merely in the spelling or arranging of the words, as in l. 8, salve where A. has saif, and B., C. saue; in l. 20, healls, carthlie, where A., B., C. have haillis, cirdlie; or in l. 8, where after me it inserts sinful and omits thy; l. 14, where for borne and gottin it reads gottin and borne; and in l. 23, where for trew Scripture it reads haill Scripture. I conclude that in l. 26 it had the rare word susseit, like A., B., C., as Mr Laing makes no mention of any variation.

In v. 1, l. 1, C. reads heuy for heue; in v. 2, l. 2, dispesche for depesche. Generally C. coincides with A., B. in the various readings given in the notes, as against D.: it does so even in regard to the rare word susseit; but in v. 9, l. 2, it has wroucht for wrocht. Substitute in v. 7, l. 4, as the various reading of B. sauc, and for that of C. zit saif me, in room of that in note 4.

P. 171. Welcum, Lord, Christ, welcum againe.—This, as stated on p. lxxvi, is an adaptation of "Welcum Fortoun" to a higher than any earthly love. In v. 1, l. 2, for bliss read blis; for note¹¹ on same line read confort, A. B., comfort, D. In v. 2, l. 3, C. reads syd for syde, and in v. 4, l. 2, praise for pryse.

P. 173. O Christ, quhilk art the lycht of day.—The similarity of the first verse of this hymn to that on p. 144 of course is at once apparent, but the Scottish poet was by no means singular in thus making a particular application of the general truth taught in the original. The German hymn-writers frequently do so in regard to several of the Psalms, and even in regard to this particular hymn Urbanus Regius had preceded the Scottish poet in making application of it to the circumstances of his own time, though he makes more specific reference to Wittemberg and the teaching of Luther, and for the "Prince of all vnrycht," substitutes him whom he and his fellow-poets (whose productions follow his in W. K. L., iii. 413 to 440) regarded as his visible representative. I give the first four verses of his piece, written, it is said, in 1524 (K. L., iii. No. 478):—

Sum makis God of freiris caip—i.e., cope or cloak, to the wearing of which by the dying or dead special virtue was attributed.

In v. 1, l. 4, B., C. read perfyte, A. perfite; in v. 2, l. 3, C. with A.,

B. reads expellis; in v. 3, l. 2, it reads ouerspred, and in v. 4, l. 2. ledand, both with A., D.; in v. 5, l. 3, inuentit with A., B.; in v. 6, l. 1. stock with A.; in ll. 1, 2, waikis where A., B. have makis; Goddis with B., while A. has God; in v. 8, l. 2, refusit with A., B., D., not rufusit as in reprint of B.; and in v. 11, l. 1, craknit with A., where B. has crakit, and D. raknit.

P. 174. With huntis up, with huntis up.—"The tune," Mr Chappell tells us, "was known as early as 1537." The words usually given with it are said to have been composed by one Gray, who did grow "unto good estimation with King Henry and afterwards with the Duke of Somerset, Protector for making certaine merry ballades, whereof one chiefly was 'The hunte is up, the hunte is up.'"

" The hunt is up, the hunt is up, And it is well nigh day, And Harry our king is gone hunting To bring his deer to bay.	The east is bright with morning light, And darkness it is fled. And the merie horne wakes up the morn To leave his idle bed."

A religious parody of the song written by John Thorne has been printed by Mr Halliwell at the end of the moral play 'Wit and Science,' together with other curious songs from the same manuscript in which it is found (Add. MS. No. 15,233, Brit. Mus.). There are seventeen verses, and the first is as follows:—

" The hunt ys up, the hunt ys up,
Loe it is allmost daye,
For Christ our Kyng is cum a huntyng,
And brougt his deare to staye."

It narrates the creation of the world and of man made in the image of God, his fall through the temptation of the devil, the mission of Christ for his redemption, the provision made for his spiritual necessities and the keepers intrusted to guard his deer against the thief and wolf, the woe awaiting them if they are unfaithful, and the bliss of those who are faithfull whether their keepers are so or not:—

" For yf they do not They wyll have the rot; What wyll the Lord then saye When he shall veve Of his deere and yowe At that most dredeful daye?	Whereby this is cleere, If so be his deare Wythin the park persever, Then shall they rejoyse, To heere his sweete voyce And be his deere for ever."

The history of the Saviour's passion is given in the poem following this one almost with as much detail as it is in several of these godlie ballads,¹ but without almost any verbal coincidences. The title of the poem is—the first half of which is the refrain at the close of each of its twenty-three stanzas.

"Nolo mortem peccatoris: hæc sunt verba Salvatoris,"

In v. 7, "He had to sell the Tantonie bell," on which Mr Laing remarks, "Evidently the bell of St Anthony," although Dr Jamieson, in his Dictionary, explained it as a "small bell," from the French tintoner, to resound; but in the supplement to his Dictionary he admitted that it might refer to St Anthony, as Lord Hailes had previously done. In a later ballad we have "Gif ze will geue thame caip or bell, the clink thair of thay will zow sell."

In v. 1, l. 2, C. reads perfyte where A., B. have perfite; in l. 3, C. like D. reads gane, which Mr Laing adopts, but B. as well as A. reads gaine; in v. 2, l. 3, C. reads crep, where A., B. have creip; in v. 5, l. 3, C. has pnies (sic) where A., B. have penneis, D. pence, which suits the rhyme. In v. 9, l. 3, B., C. read dispens where A. has dispence, and in v. 10, l. 4, obsluut where A. has absoluit. In v. 11, l. 1, C. has wait where A., B. have wot, which the rhyme requires, while in l. 4, C. has als where A., B. have ellis. In v. 12, l. 4, Thocht is a misprint for Thocht.

P. 177. Baneist is Faith now cuerie quhair.—This I take to be an adaptation of some secular ballad, of which the refrain may have been—

"Allace! thairfor my hart is sair,
And blyith I cannot be,"

both lines having a place in the first stanza and the second of them in the two succeeding stanzas. But I have come on no trace of such a ballad, unless that in the 'Complaynt of Scotland' entitled "Fayth is thair none" may be regarded as such. The piece was evidently composed when the fortunes of the Reformed were at a very low ebb, probably soon after the Regent Hamilton had dismissed his Protestant preachers and fallen under the influence of the Cardinal, and with troops had accompanied him first to Dundee and then to Perth, where there were not a few of the burgesses favourable to the new views, who, however, took care to be out of the way at that time.

In v. 1, l. 2, C reads forthinkes, and in l. 6 of that verse and of the two following ones it reads blyth where A., B. have blyith, and in ll. 1, 3, v. 2, it reads wount where A., B., D. read wont.

P. 178. Musing greittie in my mynde.—This piece is evidently related to the previous one inserted at pp. 165, 166, having its first line the same; but the second, which was previously applied to the folly of man in forgetting his frailty and mutability, is now applied to the folly and obstinacy of the triumphant Kirkmen in dealing so cruelly with the favourers of the Reformation, urging them to take warning from the fate of others who for a time had been permitted to hold God's people "in thrall," and assuring them that if they would no longer impugn the truth, and "in thair office be nocht sleuth," Christ on them "suld haif sic reuth" that "they suld not cum downe." In the last verse, l. 3, though wark and are printed as two separate words both in A. and B., I have no doubt that warkand in one word, as it is given in C. and in Mr Laing's reprint of B., is the preferable reading. On the other hand, C. leaves out Thocht in v. 5, and of in v. 7.

P. 180. The Bischop of Hely brak his neck.—In the Introduction (pp. xxi, xxii) I have given a pretty full account of the probable time at which this ballad was composed, and of the circumstances which called it forth, and I have nothing material to add to what I have already said. This ballad, like the last, ends with a prayer that the dominant ecclesiastics might be brought to a better mind, and a warning of the danger they might incur if they were not.

In v. 1, l. 1, A., B. both read neck, and so also does C., and so also A., B. do in v. 2, l. 8, where C. reads nek. In v. 3, l. 5, where A., B. read Helis, C. reads Heliis or Hellis (it is not quite clear which); the latter of course might lead the way to the reading of D., which is Helles. In v. 4, l. 2, Tharis is the reading of B. as well as of A. That may possibly be only a misprint for Pharis, which is the reading given by Mr Laing and D.¹ In l. 4, p. 182, C. has obuse for abuse, and ruttit for rutit, and in l. 7, wageour for wagour.

P. 182.—I am wo for thir wolfs sa wylde.—Whether this piece has any relation to "A petyous lamentation of ye miserable estate of the churche of Christe," I cannot say. It reiterates the complaints made of the blindness and obduracy of their spiritual guides. I have already made reference to vv. 4, 5 in my Introduction (p. xxvii). The laity, and especially "nobill Lordis of greit renowne," are entreated not to countenance them in suppressing "the word of Christ," and not to be led away even by their specious professions of patriotism and concern for "commoun weill," "for sa thay think to bleir zour E, and syne at zow to hount." Scotland, the writer says, was never in harder case since first the Scots came into it. The reference is evidently, as in a previous ballad, to the events of 1543-44, when the Regent under

¹ But it is also possible that the reference is really to Tharis or Thares, one of the two eunuch chamberlains of Ahasuerus whose treason was disclosed by Mordecai and punished by the king. Theres is the form of the name as given in chapter vi. of the canonical book of Esther, but in the apocryphal ch. xii. it is as given above in Coverdale's version; and in his "Maner to saye grace," to which he appends "shorte instructions to kinges and princes, to judges, counceclours," &c., he gives the following:—

"To Chamberlaynes.

"Beware of Thares & Bagathan,
Lest treason in the Chambre be sowne,
For if the court be ruled by Haman
Poore Mardocheus is overthrowne;
But when the treuthe is thorowly knowne,
He shall be founde a faythfull Iue
And to his prince a subiecte true."

clerical influence broke off the treaty with Henry VIII., and so afforded the latter a pretext for sending an army into Scotland. The numbers of that army are greatly exaggerated; but those of the English army of 1542 are even more so by an English exile then in Germany, who, in writing to Bullinger of Zürich, says it consisted of more than a hundred and twenty thousand men.¹

On p. 183, l. 5, C. reads birud where A., B. have brint. In l. 23, B., C. read Antichristis where A. has Antechristis and D. Antechristes. On p. 184, l. 10, C. has hardar for harder, and l. 23, wyffis for wyfis. In same line A., B. have sylde and C., D. sylđ, but Mr Laing gives fylde.

P. 185. Allace! unkyndlic, Christ we haif exilit.—I do not suppose this piece is adapted from a secular poem, though possibly it may have been meant as a parody on or reply to a religious song on the other side.

In the last line of each stanza C., D. read "Fathers of haly Kirke this xvj. hunder zeirs," where the earlier editions (A., B.) have xv. hunder zeiris." In l. 1, p. 185, C. reads unkyndly and exylit; in l. 7, it reads water with B., D., while A. has watter. In notes 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, its readings coincide with those of A., B. In l. 1, p. 186, C. alone reads suppois, wrak, and in l. 3, quire. In l. 11 it omits the o before ze; in l. 12 it reads posound for poisound.

P. 186. Of the fals fyre of Purgatorie.—None of the medieval traditions met with more contemptuous treatment at the hands of the Reformers than those relating to Purgatory, belief in which had brought into the possession of the Church so much of the land and wealth of most of the countries of Europe. To Latimer and other preachers in England "Purgatory Pickpurse" was an unailing theme for jest and satire. To the Huguenot poet of 1532 it was so also:—

" Ne demandez plus dons laissez tous ces pardons :
Car votre purgatoire
La bourse a trop purgé."

Quhill half the ryches on the moldv is seasit in their handis.—The enormous amount of land and money which had come to the religious orders in Scotland, and one condition almost always attached to which was that of praying for the souls of the donor and his kin, is fully acknowledged by the most impartial modern historians as well as by those of the time of the Reformation.

In v. 3, l. 4, read "Fundatouris" as in B., C. In v. 5, l. 1, C. has hich where A., B. have heich, and in l. 2, hie where they have greit. In v. 6, l. 1, C. reads "Thoucht thay snuffe," and in l. 4, "mischryve."

P. 187. Way is the Hirdis of Israell.—This piece is singularly akin to Gau's statement (p. 104), "Wa is me and I prech notht the wangel. . . . This consideris notht ye blind giders and pastors quhilk sekis bot the mylk and ye wow of the scheip, quhilk alsua thinkkis nay scheyme to cal thayme self vicars of Christ and successors of the apostlis. In v. 1, l. 1, C. reads Vayis as one word ; in v. 3, l. 3, costly silk with D. ; and in v. 4, l. 4, "cummandis."

P. 188. God send cuerie Preist ane wyfe.—A very sensible ballad on that which occasioned perhaps the greatest scandal in the later medieval Church. Patrick Hamilton, it is now known, married, probably secretly, shortly before his death, and left a daughter, who is mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls. Under the year 1538 Calderwood narrates (vol. i. pp. 123, 124) that Thomas Coklaw, parish priest in Tullibody, married secretly a widow in the same village named Margaret Jameson, but [they] dwelt in separate houses. At last the matter brake forth and he was accused by the Bishop of Dunblane—[the worthy referred to in note pp. xiii, xiv of my Introduction as the father of three illegitimate sons, for whom he provided portions by alienating part of the revenues of his bishopric]. He was condemned to perpetual imprisonment and mewed up between two walls ; but by help of his brother or brother's son breaking down the walls with gavelocks and other instruments, he escaped and fled to England, where he became a minister. Whether there were not others in Scotland as well as in England who secretly followed his example, and kept their secret better, and among them the author of this ballad, though in the eye of the civil as well as of the ecclesiastical judges their marriage was invalid and their children illegitimate, has never been thoroughly investigated. It is evident that the poet had given some thought to the question of the validity of such marriages in the light of the Word of God and the practice of the early Church : "Sen Christis law," &c., "quha dar say contrair it?"

P. 189. The wind blawis cauld, furius & bald.—"Drive the cold winter away," Mr Chappell tells us, is the burden of an English song in praise of Christmas. It is entitled "A pleasant country new ditty, merrily showing how to drive the cold winter away," to the tune

"When Phœbus did rest," &c. The tune is in several of the old Dance Music-books, and given by Chappell in his 'Popular Music of the Olden Time' (vol. i. pp. 193-195), along with the words. I subjoin those of the first stanza of the first part, and also of the second:—

" All hail to the days that merit more praise Than all the rest of the year, And welcome the nights that double delights As well the poor as the peer. Good fortune attend each merry man's friend, That doth but the best he may, Forgetting old wrongs with carols and songs To drive the cold winter away."	" This time of the year is spent in good cheer, And neighbours together do meet, To sit by the fire with friendly desire, Each other in love to greet. Old grudges forgot are put in the pot, All sorrows aside they lay, The old and the young each carol his song To drive the cold winter away."

If the "gude and godlie" ballad is an adaptation of this song, it has retained nothing of it save the tune and the catch-words. The object of the poet is to show how the frosty blight, which he affirms had fallen on the Church and its spiritual guides, could alone, in the opinion of the new teachers, be remedied, and pristine warmth and sunshine recovered:—

" Saif Christ onlie that deit on tré, He may baith louse and bind: In vtheris mo, geue ze traist so, On zow blawis cauld the wind.	Now sé ze pray, baith nycht and day, To Christ that bocht vs deir: For, on the Rude, he sched his blude, To saif our Saulis but weir."

As in "With huntis up" and some others of the ballads, there is a double rhyme in the first and third lines of each verse, and it is arranged throughout in verses of four lines, and not in stanzas of eight lines, like the secular ballad.

In v. 1, l. 1, C. reads furius with A., and it agrees with A., B. in all the various readings on l. 4. In v. 2, l. 2, A., B., C. all read ryte, though Mr Laing has preferred vyce, the reading of D. In v. 4, l. 3, C. reads sulthe for suith, and ere for erre. In v. 5, l. 3, C. reads Preists, and in v. 7, l. 3, preistes for preistis in A., B.; in vv. 9-13, it coincides generally with A., B. in the various readings in which they differ from D.; but in v. 11, l. 3, it reads bye, where A., B. have by and D. has buy. In v. 14, l. 1, it reads deit with A., B., and in l. 3 so with them, where D. has to. In v. 15 its readings coincide with those of A., B., as given in notes 1, 4, on p. 192.

P. 192. Hay now the day dallis.—This piece, whether it be the production of the same or of another poet than the last, was at least written when he was in a more hopeful mood, and when the prospects of the Protestants seemed to him to be brighter. It is an adaptation of an old secular ballad the tune of which goes back to the times of James IV., being referred by Douglas to the words "The jolly day now dawis," and by Dunbar to the words "Now the day dawis." The words of the old secular song may possibly be those which Montgomerie has given in extenso; but he at any rate was posterior in date to the author of this religious adaptation of it. I quote the first stanza as Dr Cranstoun has given it in the Scottish Text Society's edition of Montgomerie's poems:—

" Hay ! nou the day dawis ;
The jolie Cok crauis ;
Nou shroudis the shauis,
Throu Natur anone.

The thissel-cok cryis
On louers vha lyis,
Nou skailis the skyis :
The nicht is neir gone."¹

Dr Cranstoun holds that "the poem is one of the happiest efforts of Montgomerie's muse, and shows his lyric genius at its best." And he adds that it is perhaps the oldest set of words extant to the air "Hey tuttie tuittie," the war-note sounded for the Bruce on Bannockburn,² and familiarised to every one by Burns's "Scots wha hae." See also what Dr Small says of it in his note on Douglas's reference to it, vol. iv. pp. 245, 246. All that the author of this gude and godlie ballad has taken over from the old secular ballad with the tune is the initial line of the ballad and the refrain which concludes each of its stanzas. About the same time there appeared in England a ballad entitled "An invictive agaynste the Papistes," which may possibly have been brought under contribution; but really the ballad differs little save in expression and mode of treatment of the subject dealt with in several of the preceding very bitter ballads,—the selfishness, hypocrisy, pride, and greed of the ecclesiastics—their neglect of preaching, or substituting for the simple teaching of Scripture the dreams and traditions of men, extolling the virtue of relics, &c. "The arm-bone of St Giles," Mr Laing says, "was regarded as a relique of inestimable value when brought to this country by William Prestoun of Gourtown, who bequeathed it to our mother kirk of St Gele in Edinburgh, 11th January 1454-55."

² Dr R. Chambers, however, asserts there is no authority for the statement that "Hey tuttie tuittie" is the ancient tune of "Hey now the day dawis," nor yet for the tradition reported by Burns that "Hey tuttie tuittie" was Bruce's march at Bannockburn ('Songs of Scotland prior to Burns,' p. 253). Dr Small in vol. iv. pp. 245, 246, quoting I suppose from a later edition of Dr Chambers's 'Scottish Songs' than that accessible to me, traces the song to an English source about the year 1500 which is preserved in the Fairfax MS.; and he himself regards the tune as one which was not only popular with the minstrels in the days of Douglas and Dunbar, but which continued for two centuries to be the réveille played by the pipers in their march in early morn through certain Scottish burghs.

Of older date and even greater celebrity were the relics of St Andrew—the arm-bone and three fingers of the right hand—said to have been brought by a certain Regulus to St Andrews, and ultimately deposited in its cathedral. Even the subsidiary altars in the parish church appear to have had relics of the saints to whom they were dedicated. What Church in Scotland professed to be custodian of the head of St John, and whether it was the head of the Baptist—the very head which was struck off by Herod's executioner and presented to Herodias—I do not profess to know. No head or other part of the body of the apostle John was, I am told, claimed as a relic in any church.

P. 194. Requiem eternam, Anime omnium.—Fuller references to the Officium Defunctorum in the old Church will be found in the ballad entitled "Requiem to the favourites of Henry VI.," in Ritson's 'Ancient Songs,' vol. i. pp. 117-119, ed. 1829.

In stanza 1, l. 4, C. has appeiris where A., B. have apperis; in stanza 3, l. 1, it reads Pharisians with D., in l. 2, it reads regnis with A., B., in l. 6, zour with B., D.; in stanza 4, l. 5, it reads zour with A., B., in l. 6 ze, and in l. 7 zit with A., B.; in stanza 5, l. 1, it reads stock with A., B., D., where Mr Laing has stok; and it agrees with A., B. in the various readings given in notes 7, 8, 10, p. 193; in l. 7, it reads leisings with D. In stanza 6, l. 1, it reads strikkinn, thus differing both from A., B., and from D. In stanza 7, l. 1, it reads begylit with A., B., and in l. 3, pluke where they have pluk; in l. 7, it reads sauit with B., D., but Mr Laing admits (p. 257) that sanit, which is the reading preserved in A., is the correct one. In stanza 9, l. 2, it reads Pondis where A., B. have Pundis, and in l. 3, Aulter where A., B. have the same reading.

P. 195. Preistis, Christ beleue.—I have said in the Introduction (p. lxxv) that this seems to be an imitation of an early Swiss or French Huguenot song, which was also imitated or translated in Germany and Sweden. Matthieu Malingre, a native of Normandy, who found an asylum in French Switzerland, and latterly was Protestant pastor at Neuchatel, was the author of it and several other pieces of a similar nature. Pierre de Vingle, descended from a family of Lyonnese printers, and, like Malingre, a refugee in Switzerland, was the printer who, either at Geneva or Neuchatel, published about 1532 a tiny volume containing this and four similar pieces; and this, the third of them, had so completely disappeared in France, that the authorities of the Society of the History of French Protestantism long hunted for it in vain. The title of the volume was 'Chansons Nouvelles, demonstrant plusieurs erreurs et faulsetez desquelles le paoure monde est remply par les ministres de Satan.' A copy of the volume, however, had been preserved in the Cantonal Library at Zürich, and from that, or from one of the subsequent impressions now almost as rare, these songs were reprinted in 1871 in 'Le Chansonnier Huguenot du xvi^e Siècle.' I subjoin a few lines here and there from it, along with corresponding lines in the Scottish ballad :—

“ O ! prebstres, prebstres, Il vous fault travailler, Dieu le commande, ou il vous fault prescher Purement sa parole, Sans y rien adjouster. Il vous fault marier, Et vos commeres du tous fault oublier N'estes vous pas infames D'avoir vecu ainsi, Seduictz avez femmes Fille Chambriere aussi.”¹	“ Preistis, leirne to preiche, And Christis peple teiche. Preistis, tak zour staffe, And preiche the Euangell on zour feit, And set on Sandellis full meit. Preistis, mend zour lyfe, And leif zour foule Sensualitie, And vylde stinkand chaistitie, And ilk ane wed ane wyfe.”
---	---

Compare also the quotation on p. 286 with—

“ Preistis, put away
 Zour paintit fyre of Purgatorie,
 The ground of zour Idolatrie.”

And the exhortation to thrust out mass from their monastery, with that of the Scottish poet—

“ Preistis, sell na Mes,
 Bot minister that Sacrament,
 As Christ, in the New Testament,
 Commandit zow expres.”

In v. 1, l. 1, A. and B. have Preistis regularly throughout the ballad ; C. has Preistes, save in stanzas five and nine, where it has Preistis ; D. vibrates between three forms, as mentioned respectively in note 2, p. 195, note 10, p. 196, and note 9, p. 197. In v. 2, l. 4, C. reads pepill with B., D. In v. 4, l. 3, it reads Sandellis with A., B.; and in l. 4, where A. has pantonis and B. pantounis, it reads pantons with D. In v. 5, l. 3, where A. has coittis and B. coitis, C. reads cottis; in v. 6, l. 1, thole with A., D. In v. 7 it reads with B., D. alledge; in v. 8, l. 2, where A., B. read quyte clame, it, as also Mr Laing, has quyte claime. In v. 9 C. agrees with A. in all the various readings, and with B., save in regard to lat, for B. agrees, I find, with A. in reading inquyre, though the reprint gives inquire, as in v. 11, l. 1, it has read for reid, which A. and C. as well as B. give; and in l. 2, A., B., C. have some form of the word canon, as against the spurious reading of D. common. In vv. 15, 16, C. agrees with A., B. in all the various readings, save that it gives chastity instead of chaistitie. In v. 17, l. 2, where A. has saif, B. and D. have saue, for which Mr Laing would read (p. 257) sane; but saif could hardly be mistaken for sane, and saue is the general form they use where A. has saif. In v. 18, l. 1, where A. has wirship, B., C. have worschip. In the various readings in notes 10, ¹ Le Chansonnier Huguenot, pp. 101, 103.

11, 12, C. coincides with A., B., and in note 13 with A., D. In l. 3 of last v., B., C. have dispyte where A. has despyte.

P. 198. Till our gud man, till our gud man, Keip faith and lufe, till our gud man.—This I suppose to be the refrain or burden of the secular song to the tune of which this godlie ballate was composed. I do not suppose that the author of it borrowed much else from it, save that he sets forth the relation of Christ to His people, generally in accordance with the metaphor the old song had suggested.

In v. 1, l. 3, the readings in C. agree with those of A., B., and in l. 4 it reads prais with B., while Mr Laing adopts the reading of D. praise. In v. 2, ll. 3, 4, C. agrees with the readings of A. In v. 3 it agrees with the readings of A., B. In v. 4, l. 2, C. agrees with B. in reading giue where A. has geue. In v. 6, l. 2, it has lost where A. has loste and B. loist, and in l. 4, lose with A. In v. 7 it agrees with A., B. in their various readings (n. 9). In v. 8, l. 4, it agrees with the readings of A., B. (n. 11). In v. 9, C. reads lat and saif with A., and in l. 4, judgit where A. has jugeit and B. judgeit.

P. 200. Remember man, remember man.—Mr Laing in his note on this ballad says (p. 257) Dr Rimbault, in his 'Little Book of Songs and Ballads' (p. 79), gives this Christmas Carol from the collection entitled 'Melismata: Musical Phancies, fitting the Court Citie, and Country Humours,' London 1611, but says it is much earlier than the date of the book. It is also to be found in the Aberdeen Cantus, 1662, 1666, 1682, No. ix., as a religious song, in nine verses, of which the first and second run thus:—

“ Remember, O thou man, O thou man, O thou man,
Remember, O thou man, thy time is spent ;
Remember, O thou man, how thou was dead and gone,
And I did what I can ; therefore repent.

Remember Adam's fall, O thou man, O thou man,
Remember Adam's fall, from heaven to hell ;
Remember Adam's fall, how we were condemned all
In hell perpetual, therein to dwell.”

It is quite possible that the author of our gude and godlie ballate may have adopted the first stanza of his piece from some earlier religious version of the secular song, but if so, it must have been from some version at least a century older than the earliest Aberdeen Cantus mentioned above, and the working out of his constantly recurring theme—the sad departure of the old Church from the teaching of Christ and His apostles—must have been all his own.

P. 201, l. 21, the reading of A., B., C. is “half hag matines,” but that of D. is “haly hag matines.” Dr Jamieson, who knew only the latter, pronounces against its genuineness, both because it makes the line too long and also gives no intelligible sense. The first objection does not apply to the reading of A., B., C., and perhaps the statement in Wetzter and Welte's 'Kirchen Lexicon,' that for matins there were an Officium Simplex, Officium Duplex, and possibly also Semiduplex, may obviate the second.

In st. 1, l. 2, C. reads sauill with B., D., and with them also in st. 2, l. 2, it reads Paull, and in l. 8, Herisie. In st. 3, l. 2, it has covetice with A., D., and in l. 4, contrair with A., B., and in ll. 6, 7, 8, trappit, furth, sauit also with A., B. In note 4 it agrees with A., in 5 with A., B., and in note 6 with D. In note 7 it agrees with A., B., in note 8 with B., and in note 9 with A., B. In note 10 it agrees with A., B., save that it reads cursings, and in note 13 it agrees with them too. On p. 202 it agrees with A., B. in notes 1, 2, 6, 8, 9, 10, 13. In note 3 it agrees with B., in note 5 with D.; in note 7 with B., D., in note 11 with B., in note 12 with B., D. In l. 3, it reads als for as, and l. 14, that for thair, and in l. 24, caus for cause. On p. 203 it agrees with A., B. in notes 2, 3, 4, 7, 9, 10, 12; in note 5 it agrees with D., in note 8 with A., in note 11 with A., D. Its only unsupported reading is in the last line and last word cherity.

P. 204. The Paip, that Pagane full of pryde.—This piece is probably the most trenchant, gleeful yet contemptuous, as well as the coarsest in the collection. I know nothing approaching to it save some of the songs or poems of Walter Mapes, and how it should have been overlooked when condemnation was passed on "Welcum, Fortoun," I cannot comprehend. The refrain would seem to connect it with some Robin Hood ballad, but if so, I have not succeeded in tracing it. The only thing approaching it on which I have come is contained in a note on p. lxxiii of the Introduction to Ritson's 'Ancient Songs,' and which he says: is the burden of an ancient song in the musical volume among the king's MSS., "He, how, frisca joly under the grene wood tré." Ritson is disposed to claim an English origin even for the religious adaptation of the "The hunt is up" (p. lxxviii), but neither he nor any one else, so far as I know, have claimed such an origin for this ballad. Mr Laing says, "In this satirical effusion the expressions used evidently refer to events when the Protestants, under the name of the Congregation, had taken matters into their own hands, or to the year 1559." Before that time the three Wedderburns had been in their graves for some years, and with even greater certainty than of several of the previous bitter satirical ballads, we may affirm that this one cannot be attributed to them, nor could have had a place in any edition of the ballads issued before 1559. The deep moral degradation of the various ranks of the clergy which their own Councils and Parliament had failed to check or reform, the gross ignorance of the curates¹ and lower orders of the clergy, who had been recommended in the canon upon Archbishop Hamilton's Catechism to read over in private the portions of the catechism they were to read to their parishioners on Sundays, so as to make sure they might be able to do it in such a manner as would not excite the ridicule² of their flock, all point to the very last decadent days of the old Church. And who this gleeful chuckling satirist was we shall now probably never know. I refrain from any detailed comment on his production, and simply subjoin the following additional various readings: In st. 1, l. 3, C. reads blynd for blind, and in l. 7, trym for tryme. In st. 2, l. 1, A., B., and C. all read "abhominatioun," though both Mr Laing and I have failed to put this into our text. In l. 5, A., B., C. read respectively lardonis, lardounts, lardons; but D. reads "lurdons," which conveys a somewhat different meaning. In st. 3, l. 5, A., C. read lyues, but B. lyuis (sic). In st. 4, l. 2, A., B., C. all read had greit do not ado, and in l. 6 all three read E not ee. In st. 6, l. 3, A. has behulffit or behuiffit (I cannot distinctly make out which), C. has behuiffit, D. behuiffit, and B. behuiffit. In st. 7 l. 2, C., D. have perseu, A., B. perscw. In st. 8, l. 5, C. has parisch for parcis. In st. 10, l. 3, C. like D. has "thinkand." In st. 11, l. 4, C. has "Hipocrisie" where A., B. have "Hipocresie."

Compare with "His plak pardonis ar bot lardonis of new fund vanitie" the following:—

" Laissez moy l'idole de Romme,
C'est antechrist qui tout consomme,
Renoncez a tous ces larrons [lardons?]
Avec leurs bulles et pardons."

—Chansonnier Huguenot, p. 98.

But far more remarkable than this is the "Chanson contre le Pape et ses suppôts," pp. 129-132, composed in 1555, and sung to an "air joyeux pour la danse," which has coincidences with the Scotch in the three first stanzas (1 Pope, 2 Cardinals, 3 Bishops and Abbots), and in several of the later stanzas (as 8 Jacobins, 9 Augustins, 10 Carmes, (Carmelites)).

P. 207. Say weill is throuchlie a worthy gude thing.—I deem it quite unnecessary to add to what I have already said of this piece in my Introduction, pp. lxxii-lxxiv. I subjoin, however, the following additional various readings: In v. 2, l. 3, C. reads mony dois, while A., B. read dois mony; in v. 3, l. 2, for luck in this reprint probably laik should have been given. It is distinctly so in B., and in C. apparently it is laek. In v. 4, for wounders, B., C. read wondrous, but Mr Laing with D. gives wondrous. In v. 7, l. 1, C. reads take, where A., B. have tak, and in v. 8, l. 2, C. reads sect with D., but prounce with A.

P. 209. K'naw ze not God Omnipotent.—Another very bitter satirical ballad. But for the references to contemporary Scottish outbreaks in v. 10 and 11, one might have supposed that possibly it had some relation to a "Replye agaynste that sedicious and papistical written ballet, of late caste abrode in the stretes of London," 'Register of Stationers' Hall,' f. 140. The references in v. 10, to stepillis cast down and St Francis made to flit, might possibly refer to the local outbreak in Dundee in 1543; but more probably the poem is of later date, and the reference is to the more extensive overthrow of monasteries in 1559-60. In v. 1, l. 4, A., B. read forbiddin, while Mr Laing with C., D. reads forbidden; in v. 2, l. 2, C. reads Adams, where A., B. give Adam's, while in l. 7, B., C., D. read Paull, where A. has Paule. In v. 3, l. 3, C. has giue where A., B. have gifs, while in l. 4 B., C. have worschipping where A. has wirschipping. In v. 4, l. 3, A., B. have pardounis where C., D. have pardons, and in l. 7 inuented where A., B. have inuentit. In v. 5, l. 4, it has agane where they have agaunc, and v. 6, l. 2, oukly where they have ouklic, and in l. 5 mony for mony. In v. 7, l. 1, C. with B., D. reads transubstantiation where A. ends with oun, but in l. 5 it reads Tripartit with A., while B. has tripairtit. In v. 8, l. 4, C. reads lecherie, where A. has licharie, and B. lichorie. In v. 10, l. 3, where A., B. have zour, C. has zow.¹ In v. 12 C. agrees with D. in all the various readings given in note ⁵. In v. 13 C., D. read els, where A., B. have ellis.

P. 213. Was not Salomon, the King, To miserie be wemen brocht?—This piece, it will be noted, is exactly in the same stanza as the one immediately preceding, but there can be little doubt that if not directly of English origin, it was suggested by poems on the same subject which were of English origin. According to the 'Register of Stationers' Hall' (f. 48), licence was given "on iiii daye of Marche" 1559-60 for printing of a ballet called "Kyng Saloman." This was, no doubt, the old ballad mentioned by Marston in the play of Antonio and Melida, which began, "And was not good King Solomon," and there is too good reason to conclude that it was not a "disswatioun" from lust, but rather an apology for yielding to it—was, in fact, the original of the "ballate of lufe," of which the Scottish version has been preserved in the Bannatyne MS. (f. 215), and of which Mr Laing in his notes on this piece has given the first and second² and the tenth or last stanza. As the bane came from England, so in all probability did the first attempt to provide an antidote, for from the 'Register of Stationers' Hall,' under date 1564-65, we learn that Thomas Purfoote had "lycense for prynting of a ballet entitled 'A

² I subjoin the second of these, and place opposite it the corresponding stanza of this ballad:—

" Quhen Paris was inamorat of Helena, dame bewties peir,
Than Venus first him promisit,
to venter on and nocht for to feir:
Quhat sturdy stormes indurit he,
Lady! Lady!
To win hir lufe, gif it wald be,
My deir Lady!"

" Was not Paris, maist wickitly
Be Venus, led to Helenis lust?
For quhilk sin and adulterie,
The plagues of Troy war efter just.
The sturdie stormis he did indure:
Allace! allace!
His lusting lyfe was na thing sure,
As come to pas."

godly ballet ageynste fornication,'” which was composed in a similar stanza, and meant to be sung to the tune of “Salisbury Plain.”¹

In v. 2, l. 1, A., C. read wickitly, B. wickitlic, and in l. 7 C. has wyfe instead of lyfe. In v. 3, l. 2, C. has was for did, and in l. 4, Fortune for -toun. In v. 4, l. 1, B. has layne where A., C. have feyne, but in l. 2 gaïne where A., C. have gayne, and in same line A. has Advenerit, B. Adventerit, C. Adventirit. In v. 6, l. 1, C. has Exionyē, and in l. 5 minſing for minsing. In v. 7, l. 1, C., like B., has Anaxaretus for Anaxaretis; in l. 7 C. has sik where A., B. have sic, and in v. 8, l. 3, goodis where they have goddis. In v. 9, l. 1, C. reads with B. breidīs, and in v. 10, l. 5, it has wedded with D., and wa where A., B. have wo. In v. 12, l. 3, C. has dolorous, in l. 4 harlet, and in v. 13, l. 1, Tarquinius for -ius, and in v. 16, l. 1, lichorous. In note ¹, p. 218, for wretchet read wretchit. In connection with v. 14 as to Sardanapalus, it may be mentioned that in 1565-66 Colwell had a “lycense for pryntyng of a ballet entitled ‘The myserable unhappy fall of a vyceous Kyng called syr Danapall,’” ‘Register of Stationers’ Hall,’ f. 131b.

P. 218. With Bybill materis to begin.—In the ‘Register of Stationers’ Hall,’ f. 153, mention is made of “a ballett declaring by the Scriptures the plagues that have insued of whoredom,” which may possibly have had some similarity to the Scottish ballad.

In notes 6 and 7, p. 218, C. agrees with the readings of A., B., as also in those of note ¹, p. 219, and with those of B. in notes ² and ⁷ of the same page. In v. 4 C. reads woman with D., where A., B. have women.

P. 220. All my lufe, leif me not.—Evidently adapted from a secular ballad, but applied to a higher than any earthly love, as is done in several of the previous ballads.

In v. 1, ll. 5 and 7, A., B., C., D. all have burding in both these lines, but in l. 7 Mr Laing has burden, and also with D. from where A., B., C. have fra. In l. 4 C., like B., D., has thus where A. has this. It coincides with the readings of B., D. in note ⁶, but with those of A., B. in note ⁷. In v. 4, l. 5, C. coincides with B. in reading ladin. On p. 221 it coincides in notes ³ and ⁷ with B., D., and in notes ⁴, ⁵, ⁶ with A., B.

P. 222. Welcum, Fortoun, welcum againe.—There are no various readings to be recorded on this song, as it is not found in any of the later extant editions of the Compendious Book, and in the Introduction (p. lxxv) I have already inserted all I have to say as to its contents.

P. 176. To sum, God wot, he gair tot quot, And vther sum pluralitie.—This, I suppose, refers to the papal dispensations to hold a simple plurality of benefices, or a larger number, as many as are specified in the individual dispensation.

Zu trost uns armen leute ;
Wer uns das kindelein nicht geborn
So wern wir all zumal verlorn,
Das heil ist unser aller.
Sy du süsser Jesu Christ,
Das du mensch geboren bist,
Behüt uns vor der Hellen.

To vs is borne a barne of blis,
Our King and Empriour :
Ane gracious Virgin Mother is,
To God hir Sauour.
Had not that blissit bairne bene borne,
We had bene euerie ane forlorne,

This, as stated in the notes, p. 271, is from a quarto volume published by Wynkyn de Worde in 1530. The intention seems to have been to give some of the tunes in five, and some in three, parts, but only the "Bassus" is given in the volume.
